BURGLARY

INDIAN LADS CRIMINALLY INCLINED

SHOE STORE BROKEN INTO

Three Confess Their Guilt When Charged With Entering Shoal Store

After closing for games of basketball saturday night, John Jensen found it necessary to return to the store at a late hour and found upon entering that some one was busily engaged in the store through a rear exit.

A survey of the place did not reveal that the visitors had probably been disturbed before they had secured any goods.

Sheriff Vaughan was notified of the breaking and entering and with Deputy Charles Marshall instituted a search for suspected offenders. After considerable search they lighted on four Indian boys ranging from 17 to 20 years of age as the offenders. Upon being questioned each of the boys separately confessed to the burglary. It was learned that the boys had planned to enter the store and secure a pair of shoes from their favorite shoe dealer.

Isaac Dominic and Alex Gokey have been arraigned before Justice Hayes and each pleaded guilty to breaking and entering. Dominic was given thirteen months of a from 4 to 15 year sentence while Gokey was released on parole. The other boy, apparently too young to be sentenced, received a mild reprimand. It is generally understood that the officers considered Saturday night was his first offense and let him off easy.

'THEIR OWN DESIRE' AT PALACE TUESDAY

Scene of supreme pathos and tragedy are to be enacted at Miami [illegible] when Norma Talmadge appears in the screen production, "Their Own Desire," which will be seen at the Palace Theatre next May 6-7.

One of the principal photographic effects in the big dramatic character study in which the entire action and the sufferings center is portrayed to be a [illegible] Another considerable interest is the night fire-fighting scene in which a gigantic conflagration is depicted vividly.

Robert Montgomery plays the leading masculine role in the part Shearer this with the supporting cast including Lewis Stone, Belle Bennett, Helena Maynard, Cyrille Cameron and Mary Doran.

It is earnestly hoped that all who are friends of the Y. M. C. A. movement among the boys of Northern Michigan will be present at the banquet and program scheduled for Saturday evening, May 3rd at the Methodist Church. Time 6:30.

Local Club Champions Announced-- Exhibits and Programs an Inspiration

It is next to impossible to express in writing all the splendid features connected with the "Local Achieve" meet held last week in some twenty-three schools, when A. G. Kettunen and Miss Sylvia Wilson judged the essays and announced the championships.

Of particular mention was the interest and enthusiasm displayed by the club members and the quality of programs given. A large attendance of parents and friends were present in many of the schools and were supply amazed at the articles and garments made by these boys and girls, many of whom were only ten, eleven, and twelve years of age.

The most inspiring program was that held at Marion Center. Very close to one hundred parents and friends were present to enjoy the program. It was indeed a great thrill to see these sixteen young girls appearing with their new dresses on for the first time, each of whom having made a fine selection of material and having done remarkable sewing. Then to realize that a twelve years old girl, Barbara Williams, president of the club, had the ability to take charge of the entire program as a result of the training she had obtained from the club work.

Norwood school, Ironton, Bay View school, Loeb school, Boyne Falls school, Wellman Lake school, Deer Lake school, and Curfew school, likewise held mighty fine programs that made the local Achieve days have an occasion not to be forgotten. Great credit should be given to the Walloon Lake clubs for enrolling 100 per cent in view of the fact that their clubs were organized on February 13, the latest of any in the County, and yet completed all requirements most efficiently.

Following are the local champions:

FISHERMEN ARE HAPPY

BROOK TROUT SEASONS OPENS FRIDAY

For the next seventeen days all of the several trout streams in Charlevoix and adjoining counties, all points including the rivers as far as Mackinaw City, will be crowded with anglers, many of whom will be out for the first time this season. Many of the fishermen no doubt will meet with success while others will not be able to have the same luck. Even so, most anglers will enjoy the day of sport, who, after spending the winter indoors, welcome the opportunity to enjoy a day's outing in the open. Of course a few catch a "mess of fish" but such an occasion will be something. Probably the most unique in the State will be the annual meeting of the Otsego County Trout Club.

OUR LUCK

How much of our success is due to luck?

Good things may come our way by chance, we hear of them by accident. This may be luck.

But we do not develop them by luck, we develop them by hard work. Luck stops where work begins.

PATROL BOATS OUT FOR SEASON OF 1930

CAPTAIN CHARLES J. ALLERS

In Charge of Patrol Boat No. 1—Wintered at Cheboygan and Largest of Four

Lansing—Under the Command of Captain Charles J. Allers, Patrol No. 1, the Department of Conservation's largest commercial fisheries patrol boat, has started the 1930 season.

The ship, which lay in at Cheboygan all winter made its first trip during the second week in April, running from Cheboygan to Bay City for an initial inspection of commercial fishing operations in that vicinity.

Patrol No. 1 will spend the entire open navigation season patroling the commercial fisheries of Lake Superior, Huron, Michigan, St. Clair, and eastern Lake Erie.

The boat will assist this year in the Fish Division's whitefish planting program.

Patrol No. 1 is the largest of four commercial fisheries patrol boats operated by the Department of Conservation. The other three are located at Saginaw Bay, Green Bay, and Isle Royal. The Green Bay and Isle Royal boats are being used for the first time this season.

Dept. of Conservation Rules--Restriction on Sale of Minnows by Dealers

Lansing—A commercial minnow dealer taking minnows from any inland lake, can sell the minnows only at the lake where taken.

This new regulation of the minnow laws has caused considerable confusion among anglers according to the Fish Division of the Department of Conservation and several letters have been recently received asking whether minnows can be transported from one county to another.

Minnows, according to the Fish Division, ruling state law and Conservation regulations may not be transported outside of the state at any time, but there is no restriction on the transportation within the state except as follows. Minnows may not be seined, transported or taken from the waters of any trout stream, but may be take from other inland waters for personal use within the state.

Seines not over 50 feet in length or eight feet in width may be used for taking minnows in inland waters and seines not over 80 feet in length or eight feet in width may be used in the Great Lakes and connecting waters.

For commercial purposes, defined to be the selling, giving or furnishing to others, persons over 18 years of age, trout permits a license costing $10.00.

This license entitles the persons to take minnows from the waters of the Great Lakes and connecting waters. From all other inland lakes, providing they are sold only on the lake where taken and from certain northern streams which have been designated by the Department of Conservation, minnows may be taken under a $5.00 license.

Minnows may be taken from inland waters only during such times as they are open to hook and line fishing.

HONORS FOR THE MIDDIES PATRON

The old wooden bust of Tecumseh, once the figurehead of the U. S. frigate Delaware, will be perpetuated in bronze, the casting having been made at Washington Navy Yard, according to the Navy Recruiting Station, Detroit. For sixty-eight years the original figure has stood sentry at the Naval Academy, known to midshipmen as the "God of 2.5", the middies' own particular good luck. The highest mark possible at the Academy is 4.0, with 2.5 as a bare passing mark. On the way to examinations, future admirals were wont to toss a penny at the base of the statue, render a left hand salute, and mentally pray for at least a 2.5 grade.

LOST IN LAKE MICHIGAN

PATRICK MALLOY FISHERMAN DROWNED THURSDAY NIGHT

The first lake tragedy of the season in local waters was enacted last Thursday night about six or seven miles from the entrance to Charlevoix harbor, in Lake Michigan, when Patrick Malloy, 21 years old, slipped from the deck of the fishing tug Charles M. Hytel, plunged into the cold water and sank before his ship comrades could effect his rescue.

The tug was northbound at the time of the accident and was making the run from South Haven to Whitefish point, Lake Superior, when the owners of the craft, Captain Clyde Malloy and Patrick Malloy, brothers intended to engage in Commercial fishing. When some distance off the pier they decided to defer and remain over night in the Charlevoix harbor. With this in view they headed for the harbor light and when out some miles Patrick, the victim, was on the deck attempting to replace one of the lights that had burned out, when a sudden lurch of the boat caused him to lose both footing and hand hold, precipitating him into the lake. His brother, Clyde, was in the wheel house only a few feet away, witnessed the tragedy but unable to reach the drowned man or render aid. For some time the tug and crew members cruised around and made a thorough search of the surrounding waters but were unable to find trace of their companion, who suddenly went down almost beneath their feet, falling in the water.

After abandoning the search the tug and crew entered the local harbor, making a report of the accident and sent telegrams to friends notifying them of the tragedy. One such was sent to Mr. Hugh Malloy, father of the drowned man, at Marquette, who in response to the message arrived in Charlevoix Friday afternoon. Mr. Malloy is a former Charlevoix resident, having some years ago operated a tug for the Booth Fisheries Company and will be remembered by people who lived here fifteen or twenty years ago.

Many years he has been living at Marquette, where for the past fifteen years he has held a position as guard.

The victim of the lake tragedy is survived by his parents Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Malloy, two sisters and two brothers.

The two brothers Clyde and Patrick, were owners of the tug which at the time of the accident carried four other members of the crew, Beverly Gregg, Irving Gregg, Arnold Gunlar and Russell Carr, being the four members, all of South Haven.

A buoy was set at the place where young Malloy went down and a persistent search has been maintained by the locality in order to recover the body of the victim if possible, but efforts along this line have thus far proved fruitless.

Injure Hides by Faulty Handling

Producers in General Have Little Appreciation of Tanner's Wants.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Hides and skins of high quality often bring a higher price per pound than the carcasses of the animals from which they are taken, but farmers seldom get such prices, says R. W. Frey, of the United States Department of Agriculture, partly because most of the country hides and skins are handled carelessly.

Facilities Too Costly.

It is true that country farmers and small producers of hides and skins cannot afford special facilities for preserving well flayed and cured hides, adds Mr. Frey, but many small-town butchers do inconsistent or a waste large enough to justify much more attention to producing first class hides.

Part of this indifference is the result of the fact that producers in general have little appreciation of the tanner's hide and skin requirements. Many people think that four or five cuts in a hide make no difference or that the butcher is to blame for the cuts. Others, not to the butcher, but to a salesman, Lieutenant Tillman. Here is the plan as Tillman tells it, after describing how the horse of Arnold led to Allen and Brandon's arrest, he made their way through a trunk in the corner of the south wall of the main fort at Throgmorton and came upon a small opening at its end.

The writer, awakened from his dream, saw in the pale gray light an enormous expedition coming to him with a sword and pistol in his hand. He had presence of mind enough to rock his head and put the sword in the slot fastened in the part and the gun over his head. Taking it as he was in the long archway under the main barricade into the place of arms and across it to a house, proud on the other side, shouting all the while to rouse the garrison. Ethan rushed after him, and the men, with Indian war-whoops, crowded through the wicket and all entered the walls of the location. Tillman ordered them to form a hollow square in the place of arms, but after they had arms three cheers their enthusiasm over some time manifested itself shouting "No quarter!" they emptied at the doors and stairways of the barracks.

The first soldier to emerge from the guard house in his shirt-tail was Lieutenant Feltham, one of the invaders with a charged bayonet, but Tillman, rushing up just then, on him over the head with the flat of his sword. The man's life was probably saved by a coach he was wearing in his hair. He begged for quarter, which Ethan granted on condition that he would join the Continental's cause. The next day he led the way to a stairway leading up the facade of the west barracks.

A door opened at the head of the stairs and there appeared on the landing a man wearing an infantry officer's coat and waistcoat but holding its breeches in his hand. Ethan, almost as near each person as those out of there, you damned old rat!"—and, with Arnold at his side, began to storm the stairs. Irresistible overwhelming the surrender of the fort at the top of his ramps. The men's mutinied them to stop and were asked by what authority they entered his Majesty's Fort. Ethan answered: "In the name of the Great Jehovah and the Continental Congress!" Reaching the top with his sword raising in the air, he told the irresistible officer that he must have immediate possession of the Fort and all the effects of George the Third's—saying that if this was not complied with, or that there was a single gun fired by the men, neither man, woman or child should be left alive in the Fort."

Finding that the officer whom he had been addressing (Lieutenant Feltham) was not the Commandant, Ethan started to break in the door, but Arnold restrained him. The door opened without his aid, however, and Captain Delaplace, the commandant, fully dressed, stepped out. Resisting there was nothing else to do he handed his sword to Ethan and ordered his men to be paraded without arms. Arnold told the British officers he had received instructions from the Cambridge Committee of Correspondence to take the Fort, and Ethan told them his orders were from the Province of Connecticut. Feltham was immediately looking up to the Commandant's room, with service before both arms while Ethan and Arnold took Delaplace downstairs to order the men to lay down their arms. Meanwhile the invaders had broken in the doors of the barracks and expended their munitions in their bundle. At Ethan's command they dragged the sentinels' prisoners out and found their dependable Ethan were the same commonplaces "Now get out of here you drunken and disorderly set of rascals!"

Fortunately for Ethan one would know the truth about Indian's promises and various assurances on those occasions, there has never been printed a book with any appreciation of the Indian's side and skin requirements. Miles ranges about that four or five cuts in a hide make no difference or that the butcher is to blame for the cuts. Others, not to the butcher, but to a salesman, Lieutenant Tillman. Sweet Clover is Poor Pasture for Heifers

Although sweet clover has been demonstrated to be one of the most productive pasture crops available to Wisconsin farmers and has made possible good milk flow from dairy cows during dry seasons when other crops are less productive, the crop has to be a poor showing during a four-year trial with yearling heifers, according to G. B. Mortimer and L. W. Hauge, specialists at the Wisconsin college of agriculture.

In the experiment three lots of five dairy heifers were used to compare the nutritive value of sweet clover, a mixed timothy pasture of timothy and some alsike clover, and a mixed pasture of Kentucky bluegrass and timothy. Average figures for the period showed a gain three times as great on bluegrass as on sweet clover. The gains on the timothy pasture were more than twice those on the sweet clover.

The investigators point out that the poor showing of the sweet clover is undoubtedly due to the poor palatability of the crop. The results also suggest the possibility that good sweet clover may profitably be devoted to permanent pasture.

June Grass Pasture Is Proper Place for Flax

June grass pasture pleases early in the spring, so preference runs in the fall seems to a very good place for a flax crop. The only difficulty experienced is of land badly infested with weeds, in such cases the flax has a rapid growth and sometimes crowd the flax. If the pasture is not infested with such weeds the seeding problem will have no difficulty of this nature to be sure that these remarks are addressed, not to Ethan Allen, but to a well known Vermonter, Lieutenant Feltham. Here is the plan as Feltham tells it, after describing how the horse of Arnold led to Allen and Brandon's arrest, he made their way through a trunk in the corner of the south wall of the main fort at Throgmorton and came upon a small opening at its end.

Agricultural Hints

A grain ration will pay as a supplement to pasture when the grass seems short.

Reduction of the number of flies by isolating cows and stimulation of breeding places is most important.

When bedding cream in a cooling tank the can lid should be tightly in place or one of the cardboard tops should be used that will prevent air circulation.

Among the factors which increase fertility and fertility are vigor and vitality in the breeding stock, complete rations, with plenty of vitamins and minerals, and proper care of the eggs.

The most vigorous male birds obtainable should be the first of the breeding pens. Discard all hens which show lice on birds, that are lousy, have a coarse head, lopped comb or that are shallow breasted.

Selection of breeding stock for high egg production and the elimination of those hens which are of low vitality. It is evident that a hen which produces a large number of eggs must be strong and vigorous and have standing room.

A suitable milk house is necessary to care properly for your milk and to get the highest market price. Now is a good time to plan for a house to use the fall. In the name of the Great Jehovah and the Continental Congress!" ILLINOIS BACKS SECONDARY ROADS

The state of Illinois is embarking on a program to develop a system of highway routes. During this year it is anticipated that between $25,000,000 and $30,000,000 will be available for new construction.

"Of special interest," says Governor Louis L. Emmerson, "is the saving in means of unnecessary and functionless roads. Many of those taking for improvement of secondary roads for many years did not help the development of the general system, but detours most of their good. In the meantime for secondary roads."

"The attitude of the people generally not in favor of federal supervision. No pet theories, principles, economic views and good engineering will be applied to property because of action any individual or group."

Within a short time, I expect, we shall see the more important federal-aid routes connecting the state capitals and principal cities of the state put into such fine shape that the characteristic of the investigation of the state highway system during the last 6 years."

Good secondary roads are more closely related by the American Farm Bureau Federation. While farmers have access to all parts of their own farms, but a small percentage of the country's total mileage. Inexpensively surfaced roads can be extended this total acreage which proper drainage of road tax funds.

Better social and commercial contacts, the improvement of many highways, the lowered annual cost of automobile and ease of handling are some of the benefits of intensive secondary road building. Every state should follow the example of Illinois.

THE THEATRE

Evelyn Hoxie, one of our favorite "white" actresses, has come into her own at last and she has been raised to the position of star after several years of highly creditable screen work.

"Darkened Rooms" at the Palace Theatre, May 6-7 is Miss Hoxie's first talking picture under her new classification by Paramount. It is a crime thriller-romance based on the mystery mechanism of Ronald Jaga (Neil Hamilton), with whom Miss Hoxie, as Ella, falls in love.

Jaga enlists the aid of Ella as a "medium" for the "manner" which he conducts at the home of wealthy people for their fees. She goes into the scheme as a half hearted way and finds so much danger ahead for one she decides to back out. Jaga is aware that such cases life of his own is in the "spiritualistic circle."

In a pause to hear tenderly Ella confesses to someone dear that it has been no joke with the spirits. Jaga has put in play with the aid of confederates of the spiritual world.

Following a tense scene with the forces of evil, actually broken out the door, Ella is held captive by Jaga. Jaga's men overpowering, however, and Ella is free to marry the man she loves.

In the opinion of Miss Grace I. Dougherty, long an author of literature and family affairs, the "darkened rooms" are not necessary for the success of a seance. Many people have found in the "A Study of Spiritualism" by Miss Dougherty, and is rightly regarded as the standard work on the subject. The large array of scientific detectives who have appeared between the covers of books and on the stage and screen of the world.

ORCHARD GLEANINGS

USE PETAL FALL SPRAY FOR FRUIT

First Step in Production of Worm-Free Product.

Application of lead arsenate on the apples immediately following the falling of the petals is the first step in the production of worm-free fruit, says A. Lincoln Moses, specialist in fruit growing, at the New Jersey state college of agriculture.

One and one-half pounds of this powdered material to 50 gallons of water thoroughly sprayed over the tree is sufficient to kill the worms which try to enter through the blossom end of the apple. To hold apples on the trees, 2 pounds of dry soap powder must be added to each 100 gallons of the spray mixture. This material should not be confused with the "soap sprays." Four pounds of unneutralized lime sulphur may be used with these 50 gallons instead of the soap and lime mixture, the farmer has not changed his method of spraying for the remainder of the season.

Delay of a few days in applying this material will not be fatal to the success of the spray, warns Mr. Moses. The apples will remain exposed to the poison for several days after the petals fall and therefore it is impossible to say the calendar date for the spray. The material must be put into the eyes of the blossom before the petals fall apart and the calyx tube closes. Any spray applied after the petals fall apart will be considered one of the cover sprays for the control of the codling moth.

Although the spraying of apples is the most important work to be done at this time, other fruits should not be neglected. Peaches, plums, cherries and pears should be sprayed with lime sulphur solution, 1 gallon to 10 gallons of water. The lime sulphur solution will kill many of the fungous diseases which attack these fruits and will also help to control the scale insects. Bordeaux mixture should be used on the cherries and plums to control the leaf spot fungus.

Get Sprayer Ready for Necessary Orchard Work

As good advice as can be given on the operation of sprayer or dusting outfits: Test the outfit in advance of the season; have another one ready. Overhaul if necessary and put it into good working order. A driver of a couple of miles when the season is right may mean the entire difference between efficient spraying and failure. The life cycle of insects doesn't wait on the farmer who is somewhat capricious about the time of spraying.

Whether the operator is stressed and puzzled, conscientious and some-what careless, is recommended for any driver of such outfits, as the machine will work the operation more thoroughly.

Raspberry Canes

Left to itself, a young black raspberry cane grows upright for a few inches, then bends down in a horseshoe curve, the tip finally touching the ground. The nearer the end of the cane is to the ground when the terminal bud starts to grow, the more likely is the tip to root. By the middle of the summer both the mature canes and the young canes have rooted at the tips, and they have a canopy over the row. As is usually the case, earlier planting is indicated. The early-formed branches are found on

Facts and Fancies of the Early Settlement of the Pine River Region

By a Citizen

With the infants of spring came quite a refreshment to the little settlement at the mouth of the river. Though they pitched at the line of the bay, to the mainland of the county, they can be properly reckoned as part of the river settlement, especially when we remember that they made numerous visits with those that had wintered there and previous winter. The new arrival consisted of five married men and their families, accompanied by six single men. Among the latter was our neighbor Lewis Bebow, who will not readily forget the scene that occurred at the time of landing.

They had not been long on their new ground when the dog began to scent fast and furious. Whether it was them unknown, but they suspected the Mormons. Whether this suspicion was well founded or not is left to follow proof. The saving maxim is almost without doubt, that "a dog of Mormon by somewhere on that ground." Be this as it may, the dog passed to the west quarter, to the afternoon of the same day. On the day all the women of the settlement were out at the house of Capt. Mortimer to spend the afternoon. It was no doubt, something of a holiday time, and the wives and women's wives came from the west and daughters of any other men of them who lived on the river, and the men, for some purpose, at the first houses in the bay west of the river. It was a beautiful day, and they came down in good hay making style; a goodly train, we assume. Among the number was Mr. Bebow with his wife in the face of our Lake Michigan and a host of pleasant weather. In looking off on the lake toward Beaver Island some of them noted two small boats standing toward the shore, and on ascertain were they bent as near as possible, a glass was brought into requisition, and they were soon examined. Meantime, the boats were standing on towards the river with all sails set, but soon, to the surprise of all present, their sails were taken in, and they lay off and on for the first boat was pushed off from of by many who were capable criticism as being highly interesting and instructive.

The Herald says that it is not so that the pigeons have abandoned their Traverse City hostings. The nestings are as extensive as of the pigeons as numerous as ever. Half a thousand dozens a day will not cover the shipment of pigeons at that point.

Several Kalamazoo reporters are negotiating with Mr. James Wash burne for the construction of a tug and sail boat. Mr. Washburne re services to charlevoix the coming place on the Pine Lake region, and talks of running here now and establishing himself permanently, in ship building and repairing.

Marine.—The tug Commodore Nutt went out Wednesday morning to tow in the schooners Valentines, which had remained for a tug, and after getting hold of her the schooner failed to take in her canvas soon enough to escape a squall, which struck her and forced her into the bay, thereby the Commodore in her attempts to keep off a collision with the schooner Valentine, came in such a way as to damage the tug somewhat, but not to put up the river. The tug promptly responded to the requirements of the vessel, towed her into the harbor, and then proceeded to the assistance of the schooner Valentine, and in a few hours succeeded in getting her off. The Commodore Nutt is a staunch and powerful vessel, and is well handled, and is a credit to the lake service.

Notice.—The undersigned will not be responsible for any debts contracted by any person in my name after this date.

Dated, Charlevoix, May 1st, 1880.

Lewis Bebow.

Last Camp.—Supervisor Northrop left early the morning of yesterday, a necessary for the organizing of the township of Charlevoix. During the evening there was a meeting of the Republican party, at which correspondence was put in progress.

May 5th, navigation opened with the arrival of the propellers Jay Gould, Corsica and Manitou. The old schooner Lucy Sheridan arrived, but could not get up the river. The last sail schooner much amusement in the bay, as she made a number of short tacks, and finally came to anchor in the channel. During the evening there was a considerable crowd on the docks to witness the arrival of the steamers, and to see the unloading of the freight.

Mr. Wells, of Petoskey, was in town on Monday. He is negotiating several properties which were shown, with the view. The engineer, Hugh O'Neil, accidently fooled himself in the water while fishing yesterday, which caused a considerable excitement for a few minutes, but he was rescued. Dredging operations commenced on the 3rd inst. Capt. Mansfield, during the last few days, has been putting the channel in shape for the harbormaster of the port, and will report well for Tuesday's work. It is expected that the dredge will be ready for work by the 15th inst.

The successful and promising improvements which are being made in the harbor, and the consequent increased commercial importance of the upper part of the county, have induced the Board of Supervisors, at their session last week, to make a special appropriation of $1,000 for the improvement of the harbor at this place. The money will be expended under the direction of the harbormaster, and will be used in dredging out the channel, and in building piers. The work will be commenced as soon as the weather will permit

THE CONSTITUTION AFLOAT

The American frigate Constitution rides the waves again! The famous warship has been made over from a decaying hulk into a semblance of its gone glory. "Old Ironsides" is afloat because the children of the United States gave pennies and nickels to a fund that grew to be $300,000. It was only right that hundreds of school children should have a hand on as the Constitution sat grain up on the water.

Shades of the men who contributed to the forty-two cutterns subscribed by the Continental navy, where that the old frigate has been resurrected from a grave in mud, that her dead spars and timbers have been replaced with new, that she is restored to seaworthiness, seems to open about the seven seas "Old Ironsides" name from 1812, when President Washington launched the keel, thrilling her countrymen. She defeated the sea Victorious 21, 1917.

The restoration of the Constitution is an eloquent gesture. She will have no practical duty in the navy. Her usefulness is in summoning up scenes of years when battles on the high seas frequently decreased into hand-to-hand death grapples. She was the pride and the glory of the American navy in the earliest 80s. For years while the Constitution was the American flagship, protected and honored by the guns of all parts of the world, are greatness were still unknown.

"Old Ironsides" takes American back to the beginnings of their republic. She is emblematic of American skill, ingenuity and resourcefulness in building war vessels capable of defending the proud name of the nation. Should the Constitution be sent on a tour of American ports, interest in the navy would be quickened. Sight of the old craft would stimulate pride of what a new-born nation achieved in defense of its rights.—Charlevoix News and Courier.

MODERN GASOLINE SUPERIOR

The motorist who fills his tanks at a service station awaiting the products of one of the many dependable producers, is getting the best motor fuel that modern science can produce.

The type of gasoline was sold by established companies is better than is required by law, is quite uniform, and is superior to any obtained since the war. Power, quick starting, acceleration and general operating efficiency are assured to a degree unheard of 20 years ago.

The excellence of present-day gasoline is said to be due to two influences—cooperation and competition. Cooperative laboratory and road experimenting between oil producers, automobile manufacturers and the Federal government has led to the development of a better fuel. And out of competition has come a series of character tests. Not only are automobile companies free and ample each other's products but the U. S. Bureau of Mines buys gasoline in the open market to certain parts of the nation for the purpose of laboratory investigation.

Today's actual person for gasoline is near half what they were in the early days of motoring. The consumer pays more in some states is due to excessive state taxes.

NO PLACE FOR GOV. ERNMENT OWNERSHIP

The heaviest slap on American economic progress is the enormous annual output of half-baked laws aimed at organized business or at the personal initiative and freedom of action of the individual citizen," is the opinion of Charles A. Eaton, Congressman from New Jersey.

"An American scheme of life has no place in it for government ownership and operation of any business which private enterprise can do equally well. In America the government exists for the people, not the people for the government.

"The problem of governmental regulation of corporations in the public interest presents a real test of our ability to govern ourselves.

"If we approach the problem with the object of revealing the authority and grandeur of a group of lawyers it will remain forever an unsolved problem.

"Corporate business is chiefly financing taxes and more complex if its responsibilities in every direction and consequently is governing itself more efficiently.

"As this ability grows the necessity for governmental regulation will diminish. Meanwhile every citizen who believes in the American way of life should realize that action in accordance with business in legislation, by sovereigns and unworkable humanitarian rules, by unnecessary and costly investigations and by an attitude on the part of any American government which makes government anything but the supreme servant of the people."

NATIONAL AFFAIRS
Frank P. Litchert

America is never without expert political advisers of foreign nationality willing to teach us just how we ought to conduct our international affairs. Typical examples of recent note are M. Andre Geraud, noted French writer better known to the reading public as "Pertinax," and H. Wickham Steed, British publicist, who appeared recently in Washington at the annual banquet of the American Society of Newspaper Editors, at which President Hoover was the guest of honor. Although the two named visitors were to speak on French and British journalism, both of them devoted the greater part of their addresses to forthright exhortations to which Uncle Sams came in for a great deal of advice and criticism because of his supposed aloofness from the trials and tribulations of Europe. The League of Nations and the Court were not specifically stressed. What was particularly noticeable was the intense stress put upon the duty of production, and work toward raising the living standards of its people by the American standard. When the workers in Europe live as well and are paid as well as the American workers, there will be no need for a protective tariff, and perhaps not for so strict immigration barriers either. For if the people in Europe can do as well at home as abroad, they will stay at home. They come to America because they think they can better themselves. The solution of the problem is not to drag down America to the European economic level, but to improve conditions in Europe. And this cannot be done by destroying America. If Europe wants peace and prosperity let it not forget that peace and prosperity begin at home. They can best be secured by constructive work at home and not by destructive propaganda abroad.

but because Europe feels that something must be done about it we have campaigns, not only to get us into Europe politically commercially, but campaigns to destroy our tariff to induce us to cancel the war debts and to modify our immigration laws. Fortunately these campaigns have not yet succeeded, but it is up to the American people to keep informed on what is really going on.

America has done its share toward disarmament, peace promotion and international amity during the past decade. It is willing to do more, but not through sacrifice of its political independence. If Europe really wants disarmament let it reduce the size of its armies, in keeping with the size of the American army. If it wants to do away with tariff barriers, let it adopt the American idea of production, and work toward raising the living standards of its people to the American standard. When the workers in Europe live as well and are paid as well as the American workers, there will be no need for a protective tariff, and perhaps not for so strict immigration barriers either. For if the people in Europe can do as well at home as abroad, they will stay at home. They come to America because they think they can better themselves. Their immediate object is to get him into a humiliating frame of mind. If anything falls into the Lansing Detroit door or by a back door or even a cellar entrance can accomplish this end, all well and good. But getting him into the European combination is not the only result they have in view, to the end, the end bring a super-government which will control not only interesting political policies, to an extent at least.

European publishers and propagandists appear to be painfully purblind to the testimony of Uncle Sam in opening the international gold mines. They do not seem to realize that he takes pride and comfort in the fact that he has the most prosperous country with the best wage scale and the highest standard of living in the world. For centuries and centuries European nations have been quarreling and fighting, one against the other. Even today they have been unable to get over this evil habit. Yet although they well know this, our European critics persist in the smug belief that we are depressed why the American people hesitate about plunging into such a maelstrom of suspition, jealousy and intrigue.

Announcements for political office in the county, according to reports, will be plentiful this year, making for a lively time of a heavy crop. From the present outlook there will be several candidates for each of the high-er offices if those now interested do not abandon their proposed plan of entering the primary.

Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Rupert arrived here Sunday for a few days visit and are at their summer home for the season. Mr. and Mrs. Rupert for many years have been the first of our summer citizens to open their summer homes, and usually remain later in the season than do other regular summer visitors.

Work on lawns and general improvement work on yards and residences is occupying the time and attention of many persons throughout the city. Street cleaning and removal of rubbish is also claiming the attention of the street department force, as a result there is a lively appearance to all parts of Charlevoix.

According to an official report lately issued by the State Treasurer represented at the Poultry Women Conference held at Mt. Pleasant last week, Michigan ranks among the leading students and instructors attended the meeting. Of this number Charlevoix County was credited with having seventeen. Antrim County ten and Emmet County seven visitors.

Patrol boat No. 1, Captain C. J. Allen and crew accompanied by Commissioner Arthur Henry Pike were here Wednesday afternoon and evening making a search and survey of the waters of Round Lake, subject primarily being that of locating and condemning, if any are found, fish illegally set. Nothing of the sort was uncovered. Frequent reports have been made concerning illegal fishing in Lake Charlevoix and the purpose of investigation was made to establish the truth or falsity of such reports.

Motto for Camp Charlevoix.

Early this week a letter was received by Mr. North from Dr. Lewis B. Reimann, Director of Camp Charlevoix. He states that he is searching for an appropriate motto to chisel in the mantel of the new clubhouse, and offers a prize of $5.00 for the best motto contributed.

Accordingly, the English classes have taken this up as a special project and each student has contributed a motto. The best fifteen or twenty will be sent to Mr. Reimann, who, together with Prof. J. Raliegh Nelson of the University of Michigan, will select the winning motto.

The only limitation placed upon the mottos is pertaining to length. It should be between 10 and 20 letters. The theme may represent scout nature, loyalty, friendship. It may be taken from the Bible, from literature or it may be original.

The accepted motto will be carved in Gothic style on the new mantel above the fireplace and each will designate the name of the person who submitted it.

Notice: This contest is not limited to High School students. Any one in the whole school, grades down to submit a motto may do so, by merely dropping it to the High School by Monday.

Basketball Players Receive Letters

Monday morning an order to put aside all books for a few minutes was issued by Principal North. The boy's basketball letters had arrived and were going to be presented. The meeting was begun by a speech from the coach, which was well appreciated by the students of Charlevoix High. He then presented the letters. Four of the letters went to the schooling class. These were earned by Rex Superneau, Oscar Stowell, Roy Kelderhouse and Joe Shaw. These letters went to the Junior Class. They were given to Bill Novak, Robert McCall and Victor Smith. One letter went to the Sophomore class and this went to Norman Bowers. Three eight boys then elected their captain for next year. Bill Novak will be Basketball Captain for the coming school year.

Later a meeting of letter football men was called for the purpose of electing captain. William Clark was elected captain of the team for the next season.

Elementary Building

A new spring project is under way that promises to be very effective in making our school grounds more attractive. Every day, under the supervision of their teachers, groups of children are given time to take care of the school lawns. This consists of picking stray bits of unsightly material that mar the beauty of our surroundings.

The main object of this work is to instill in each child the pride and respect they should feel for public property, as well as personal property. We want them to develop a feeling of responsibility in regard to duties that they are to perform.

Spelling Contest

Last fall Cheboygan challenged Charlevoix to a spelling contest and Charlevoix accepted the challenge. This contest will be held next Wednesday evening at 7 o'clock in the Gymnasium. An admission of 10 cents will be charged. The pupils to be represented in this contest are each first speller from each grade beginning with fourth and including the Eighth

SPORT NOTES HERE AND THERE

By Newman

The boys of C. H. S. are mostly all interested now in some of the spring sports. With the fast approaching track and field meet to be held a week from Saturday, the local thinclads are stepping lively in order to be in shape by then. Some of the original gang that turned out for the tryouts on opening night have decided that they aren't good enough to travel in such fast company as the others represent, and so have dropped out. We expect "Dutch" Bergman, the second to take care of the job of starring for the Red and White. In a recent tryout, he ran a quarter of a mile in fast time and looks good. Some of the other boys will probably take care of an also necessary job of furnishing opposition in other events for stars from other schools.

The golf team will probably be composed of McCall, Novak, Superneau and Smith, but someone else may entrench on us by breaking into the lineup and forcing one of the above named to the sidelines.

The Old Kid hasn't picked a tennis team yet. Maybe we ought to let the Coach handle that job, himself.

There was quite a contest in nearby fishing streams last Thursday to see who could be the first gentleman to the water, and, of even more importance, to be the gentleman with the most fish. We won't tell who won because that would hurt the feeling of about twenty others who think that they won, too.

This is sin's necessity, to destroy itself. Immortal man demonstrates the government of God, good, in which is no power to sin" (p. 495).

Mount Vernon "Guest Chambers" Gone

Washington—Never again will the bedroom where George Washington slept be occupied by an ordinary in dividual.

The Mount Vernon Ladies' association, a group of women from the 48 states who control and manage the Washington mansion 18 miles south of the National Capital, have just finished an improvement at this historic place which means that the home of George Washington henceforth will be sacred from modern occupancy.

Since it was taken over by the group, it has been open to the public. In two years 50,000 persons have visited it. Many of these were from foreign countries. Others were from the farthest interior of the United States, and have never had a chance to see the home of the first president.

The new building is a low, rambling structure, copying the original architecture as closely as possible. It has partially cut up into modern facilities for the housing, including a three car garage and all necessary plumbing and heating equipment. It will fit into the landscape so that the casual tourist visiting Mount Vernon will hardly be able to distinguish it from the original building.

The number of tourists visiting Mount Vernon is increasing in number from year to year, until now the historic estate sees an income from admission fees of more than $150,000 annually. No other historic spot in or near the capital has so much drawing power. Last year ten cents became of visitors was more than 300,000.

Twenty-five cents is the price of admission, and the visitor may spend as many days as he wishes. Guides are provided to conduct parties, and through this inspection will meet every scheduled requirement in the complete history of passage.

THE ART OF EATING

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

If I had my way I would absolutely outlaw nutrients. It seems to me a pure waste of time to eat a half dozen or more trifling morsels of food with which to supplement the day is ended. Not only to repeat the process all over again the next morning before the day is ended. Not that I do not enjoy eating; quite the contrary, but there are so many other things I should better employ my time.

Perhaps before long some ingenious chemist will devise a capsule or a pill small enough to carry to the vest pocket, to give one the necessary concentrated nourishment, and of such small bulk in the stomach as one of these and be fed for the day.

But as things are now, eating is of necessity a function. We must, in order to live and to be able to do the other things in life worth while, that we might as well make the best of it. The thing that is always surprised me is the fact that eating is often and as carelessly as we do, and once so long a period, we have not developed more skill and refinement from the animals which eat merely to satisfy hunger.

There should be an enjoyment in eating, a refinement, a show of good taste, a disinclination and a pains that suggests something higher than the mere desire to shovel in enough calories to keep the machinery of the body going for an hour or so.

Dog is an example of what I mean. Eating at the table seems more an individual affair with him than a business. He approaches a meal slowly, he finishes the others quickly and with a skill that shows an acquaintance with the mechanism of eating. He is never in a hurry, never engrossed with his food. He seems more interested in the people about him and in giving them a good time than in the satisfying of a physical appetite. It is a compliment to watch him, for there is nothing gross, nothing to which nothing hurried, or hoggish about his eating.

Horse is a man of prominence and importance in the community in which he lives. There is no certainty as to what will happen when he feeds himself, either in his stabling or in the table feeds. He operates when he sits down to eat. It can act as if he had something more to do, and that he has more immediately important job. He has also his table courtesy and of taking a meal he gives the impression of being a gourmand and a bon. He knows nothing of the art of eating.

Old Crops Often Found Disguised

New and Fancy Names Give Impression of Discovery of Value.

Every now and then some old but little known food is given considerable notice in stories and advertisements in the press. Many people get the impression that by some magic power a new crop has been discovered which has all the good qualities and none of the short comings of the crops commonly grown.

To some extent this is the situation which now exists regarding grass or "hardtack," says Dr. John H. Martin, cereal crop specialist of the United States Department of Agriculture. Hoyo is not a new crop. It was introduced into the United States during the early colonial period, and has been listed in the catalogues of leading seed dealers for many years. Marriage in High Life.—Upon the arrival of the Duke at Traverse City, on Monday evening last, we found considerable excitement prevailing in the village in consequence of a marriage that had just taken place between one Uncle Sam, a negro, African—black as the shades of Erebus—and a Miss Traverse,—a fair (?) lass, with gray eyes and red hair. The brother of the modern Desdemona was, at the time of our arrival, scouring the streets of the village with a loaded revolver, observing that if he met Darby or anyone looking like him he would put him out of the reach of the Fifteenth amendment or pause on the attempt." A dark colored procession "might have been seen" very early on Tuesday morning, attempting wending its way out of Traverse City, stowaise, no doubt, for some object in which to have the happy couple to spend an undisturbed honeymoon. We know was serious danger of a public demonstration on the part of the lagoa of the waters.

Fire Department.—Chief Engineer Miller reports that there will be a meeting at Town Hall Thursday evening to organize a village department.

The Resort.—J. L. Sebring, H. W. Page and George Smiley, all of Kalamazoo, arrived in town on May 20, to work. They are members of the Committee of the Resort Association and at here for the purpose of inaugurating certain improvements in their grounds, and effecting the purchase of several acres of land on which lies between their present island and Round Lake and the aquaduct, owned respectively by Mayor Dixon, J. M. Clark, Green, Hutton, Shackman and A. C. Newman. The solicitations are in progress, and the property will undoubtedly be transferred this week. The Consideration is to be $700 per acre.

Mr. Roberts has the frame up for the Rooney Cottage. It is to be one of the finest on the grounds, cost about $1000.

A side walk eight feet wide, is also in to be ordered the entire length of Bridge street on the east side. There are those, we regret to say, who own property on this street who oppose the improvement and wish the main traveled streets, as far as they can. It may not have occurred to these gentlemen that this village is expanding, both in size and business importance, and that these improvements are a necessity. If any person is unfortunate enough to own an extensive unoccupied front on a business street, that is his ill fortune, if he chooses to so regard it, and if a majority will that his valuable property shall contribute its share toward the general public convenience, he must not appeal, but conform quietly to such will or submit to some of the high priced lots in Traverse improvements must go on.

The Furnace.—President Cherrie, of the Pine Lake Iron Co., arrived Friday, and proceeded at once to the furnace grounds. Superintendent Jackson has 8 force of men employed on the grounds in grading and constructing temporary sheds. A blacksmith and carpenter shop have been built, and a 22x50 boarding house is in process of construction. Carpenters are at work in building derricks, etc., and preparing for the commencement of the main building. The site for the blast has been selected, by the valley line southeast of the main site, and thirty-five yards will be commenced soon. The company have purchased a small steam yacht, called Our Boys, with which to run between Charlevoix and the works, and also barges.

We are informed by President Cherrie to state that, in addition to their main office, the company have fully decided to establish a store in this village to be connected with the furnace by a telephone. This is substantially the item alluded to last fall, and makes Charlevoix the business metropolis at the end of the contemplated railway.

The company have leased the Friends store building, on Bridge street, and will occupy it for the present for their store and office.

FORTY YEARS AGO

IN EARLY DAYS

Pine River" Navigation Notes—The Beginning of Charlevoix and Pine Lake Commerce.

"Tempora Mutantur et Nos Mutam-ur."

The season of 1854 opened unpleasantly for both settlers, of Mich. for some days in which to get their supplies of provisions and other necessaries of life from the north. Ice and bridges were another thing to secure, and properties would find the lower and lifted the yards. Johnson Bros. & Co., of Northport, were quoted in the fuel market at 17,000 bbl.

In the summer of May the ice was apparently firm for a safe outing, but the outgoing of that day the people Fountain City appeared, and after sporting all night, reached the Manitou Islands in safety by morning. Capt. James Pratt, wrecked at Sturgeon Bay, was chosen commander of the water that the protection of the mouth of the lower channel and entirely unobstructed. The opening of navigation finds a bar across the mouth with only six feet of water over it.

The uncertain prospects of navigation unchained a particular activity among our people in the direction of securing a county appropriation. At a special winter session of the board of supervisors a resolution was introduced granting a proposition on the 6th of June a proposition to raise a tax of $5,000 for harbor improvements. An ingenious construction of the law by some of our overzealous citizens made the $5,000 apply under certain provisions to Pine River as well as Pine Lake harbor.

On the 1st of July the schooner Morris was released and towed to Chicago. W. S. Johnson, of this place shipping as first mate.

Vessels came too thick during July and August for us to enumerate them. Of those trading here we find the Wisconsin, Matoona, Westcott, Quickstep, Salina, Travis and Pettigrew.

The survey of the harbor had established the location of the piers and sustained the channel boundaries. This involved the removal of the south outer and shore connection of the proposed line of work. On the 4th of July a call was made for volunteer hills to accomplish that object, but from up the lake there came no response. It was subsequently done by those who all along had borne the brunt of the burden —Charlevoix people.

July 18th the economic pilgrim was totally wrecked at Antrim.

August 15th, Capt. Jason Mott, of the steamer Annie was removed. The Alert was making a trip to Petoskey via Bear Creek had just come to be known and the Captain had overboard.

The same month the wreck of the propeller Westmoreland was again uncovered near Sleeping Bear, and the Lake Michigan Wrecking Company took a contract to raise here. A diver went down and discovered her cargo of hides in a good state of preservation. After some months and considerable years. The record of 1854 does not show that any propeller was made in the work of recovery.

From August 1st to the close of the season things universal activity and unusual magnetism, vessels coming and going, and many visitors. The well remembered business men of that year. Many prominent men came over from Traverse, Grand Traverse and Leelanau to the following month. Charlevoix felt the effects of the land boom more than any, and the most part of the year was a period of inactivity throughout the region.

During September the old propeller R. P. Wade was converted into a sailing barge for merchandise going into another coast.

The VanBraklin left the bay on the 16th day of November for the south, and on the 20th the Traverse Bay was closed for the season, the last boat of the season.

A Pere Cu, report a large quantity of wood left over as a result of the hard times; but the footings in the fall show an aggregate of 150,000 tons—figures exceeding those of 1853 by a handsome sum. Congratulations of your friends ion to the thanks of every citizen of Charlevoix County.

I again congratulate you most sincerely upon your victory at that time, and am sure that the pledges you then made to the members of the Seventy that they should be equally entertained by the good people of Grand Rapids, the Beautiful" (such was the appellation of the city last summer) from DeHaven) will from my knowledge of your people, be nobly redeemed.

With kind regards, I am most sincerely your friend,

Chas. E. Brewster

A REAL ROAD PROBLEM

The good roads movement in the Grand Station have been productive of a most unusual interest, and we are likely to reach the conclusion that our present highway mileage is adequate for all purposes and that there is no necessity for going to the expense of farther building on a large scale.

The fields show differently. The United States has within its limits the most unfavorable as the rest of the world, but Europe has four times as much surface transportation.

We stand twelfth in the world in the proportion of highway mileage to actual miles of territory.

A vast fund for highway development is annually subscribed in this country. Great stress has been laid on construction of trunk highways. Farm-to-market roads must need attention.

At present there is a determined movement, led by the American Farm Bureau Federation, to provide the farmers with the all-weather year-round highways that he needs and deserves. This can be done, in most places, without extensive cost to the taxpayers by employing economical, low-priced, but long-wearing surfaces. So long as an overwhelming majority of American farmers live on roads that are impassable during several months of the year there will be a serious road problem.

At the regular communication of Charlevoix Lodge, No. 282, F. & A. M., held last Tuesday evening, past-Masters G. E. Washburn and M. J. Shackman were presented by the Lodge with elegant past-masters' jewels. These gentlemen are rung loved among the veterans of the Order here, and the gifts were suitably bestowed.

Forest fires were rampant last week. Up at Hortons Bay L. S. Nee had earlier this and paint to the value of $2,500 in outside improvements. The Shilly steamer was sent up, but the fire was extinguished before it reached there and the rain finally put everything out of danger. The estimate cost Mr. Nee $75, but he don't kick.

White sailing off Mackinac Island a heavy squall came up and the two men were thrown into the water at a considerable distance from the shore. This was 20 years ago. At the time, the Fountain City, Capt. Gibson, was on her way from Buffalo to Chicago and her master thought the report of a gun was a signal for assistance, and he immediately supplied with that picturesque "language" known as "Americanese."

DIRECT ACTION NEDED

The failure of unconditional compulsory automobile liability insurance in Europe is the self-evident fact that a careless or incompetent driver is a menace to the safety of the community. Direct action is needed to relieve the innocent victim of damages.

There are many ways in which accidents can be reduced. One is to educate drivers and pedestrians in their responsibilities. Another is the effort to enforce modern, sensible traffic laws.

During the past several years accidents to school children have materially decreased because of the education of safety ordinances in the curricula of progressive schools. During this same period restrictions to adults have rapidly increased.

We cannot send all drivers to school. But we can pass licensing restrictions that prevent them operating motor cars unless mentally and physically competent and can pass thorough rigidly enforced traffic regulations. We can remove the constantly reckless driver from the public highways.

Unconditional compulsory insurance adopts the wrong method in working for a good end. Direct action is what is needed to remedy the growing accident problem.

THE THEATRE

CLARA BOW'S LATEST HAS YOUNG CAST

Youth has its fling in Clara Bow's newest all-talking picture, "The Saturday Night Kid" for as usual the dashing little bombshe from Brooklyn is supported by a cast of popular young players.

There are James Hall, who played with her in "The Plastic Age"; Jean Arthur, who was seen most recently in "The Green Man's Cane"; Frank Hoon, star, but young Long Island movies find, scoring color with him a screen contrary; Eddie Boles, who was seen with Miss Bow in "The Fleets In"; Leone Lane, Jean Harlow and others.

The play was written by George Abbott and John V. A. Weaver, famous Broadway playwrights.

It concerns the lives of the boys and girls who work in the big department stores of the metropolis and it is plentifully supplied with that picturesque "slanguage" known as "Americanese."

Miss Bow is the hard working little aboriginal, serious-minded but glowing with "pep" who falls in love with Jason Hall, young clerk and engineer in an evasive years time—that of Sam Wells' Charlevoix Chronicle, novel, Sam Arthur, of Jason Hall's acquaintance, and the latter to high position in the firm, and decides to win him for herself.

"Well, Ebenezer, I see you have returned from France, and apparently without any scars of battle."

"Did you get up to the front where you could hear the big guns and bullets whiz through the air?"

"Well, Eb, what I'd like to know, is whether you killed any Germans while you were over there."

"No, sah! Ah never killed no Germans, Mistah Jones."

"Well sah! Dere was boats comin' back most ebb each day."

The conversation ceased without and signal.—Exchange.

BUSINESS INCREASING

REPORTS SHOW HEAVIEST TRAFFIC NORTH

ON STATE FERRIES

Increase of Over Ten Per Cent Over that of Previous Seasons

There has been a pronounced increase in business on the State ferries this season over that of previous years, an increase of approximately ten per cent, according to reports while there is every indication that this percentage will be greatly increased before the close of the season.

For the week ending April 27, the ferry receipt totaled $2,690.25 and for the corresponding period for 1929 was reported as $2,440.75.

The preceding week ending April 20, 1930 showed receipts totaling $1,480.75.

Ice in the Straits caused some delay in the placing of the ferries in commission this year, and while this shows that the 1930 service was about three days later than in 1929 it will be a long time if ever that the Straits will be closed as long as they were during the winter of 1928-29.

TARDY HONORS TO BE PAID AN AMERICAN

STATUE FOR JEFF. DAVIS

Who Deserves to be Remembered for His Services to the Nation—Story of their Issue

When the statue of Jefferson Davis is unveiled on Monument Hill in the Capitol at Washington within the next few weeks, that ceremony will mark the passing of the last vestige of the fact that the state of Mississippi is honoring her most distinguished son. It will mark the passing of the last of the many efforts that the people of the South have made to show their appreciation of his services to the nation before he became the leader of a lost cause and in an illustrated feature article in this issue of The Sentinel, Elmo Scott Watson tells what has been spirited campaign which has now been in progress for over half a century, ever since they were little children living as neighbors in Mississippi. They grew up together, sat at adjoining desks in school, attended the same church, were married in 1876, the bride as pictured in a Hartlett gown with her tiny head covered with gay little red ringlets; the groom as dashing as a Southern gallant in a magnificent pair of mustachios.

Twenty years later, in 1890, they came to Tacoma, where Mr. Upright worked for awhile in an investment office and then worked for the Northern Pacific, and for the past 15 years has worked for the Weyerhaeuser Timber Co., tramping many miles through the lonely forests of Washington each day. At 82, he still does it.

They have four children, Chauncey Upright of Wilcox, Arizona; Mrs. Zola Brunworth of Pasadena and George and A. O. Upright of Tacoma and Seattle, Rep. Upright lives with them.

Last Monday, they celebrated their 60th anniversary with a reception party attended by their two Tacoma sons and their families.

Mr. Upright expects to remain rounding out the century with each other.

May he there is something in a name. Upright is their name; upright they have lived together for 60 years, and upright and stately they still stand, like aged oaks, with their roots firmly drinking at the same Spring of Love, their branches lovingly entwining in the Blue Sky of Happiness.

Note: Mr. and Mrs. Upright, prior to "going west" were prominently identified with Charlevoix, its progress, prosperity and social activities and will be best remembered by those now living who were residents more than a generation ago. The write-up by Stuart Whitehouse is taken from a recent issue of a Tacoma, Washington, daily and will be of more than passing interest to readers of the Sentinel who were personal friends of the venerable couple in connection with the write-up two excellent pictures, one showing Mr. and Mrs. Upright as at the present time and one as they appeared sixty years ago and from their appearance as shown in the latest picture they have many years yet to cover before they come to the end of the highway of life.

MARRIED 60 YEARS

MR. AND MRS. A.R. UPRIGHT CELEBRATE

THEIR ANNIVERSARY

At Tacoma, Washington For Many Years a Resident of Charlevoix

Years come and go, styles and costumes change, but the spirit of true love remains always the same, according to Mr. and Mrs. A. R. Upright, 2222 20th Avenue, Tacoma, who celebrated their 60th wedding anniversary this week.

With a trail of 60 pleasant years of married life stretching back into yesterday, and the path ahead lighted by the joy of their love for each other, Mr. and Mrs. A. R. Upright of 2093 No. Cheyenne St. on Wednesday entertained their simple formula for being happy though married.

Mr. Upright is 82 years young, and as sturdy as the timber he cruises six days a week. Mrs. Upright is as sperry and full of fun as when Miss Ann Elizabeth Hall and county home in shipshape fashion.

Their secrets for success in marriage are old, but ring true after 60 years of testing.

1. Be kind to each other and be willing to do your share.

2. Know each other well before getting married.

3. Have plenty of children.

Mr. and Mrs. Upright have known each other for three-quarters of a century, ever since they were little children living as neighbors in Mississippi. They grew up together, sat at adjoining desks in school, attended the same church, were married in 1876, the bride as pictured in a Hartlett gown with her tiny head covered with gay little red ringlets; the groom as dashing as a Southern gallant in a magnificent pair of mustachios.

MILLIONS FOR IMPROVEMENTS

Large Construction Program by Telephone Co.

The telephone industry has embarked on a tremendous construction program for an increasing long distance service, Manager Douglass announced today. One hundred million dollars will be spent between now and 1933.

It is interesting to note that but 15 years have passed since the first call was completed between New York and San Francisco. Now every part of the country can not only talk with every other part, but it is possible to telephone from the United States to almost every important European center. Long distance telephony is revolutionizing international social and industrial contacts.

SMALL BLAZE LAST SUNDAY

Members of the fire department were called to the L. P. Adams residence on Belvedere Drive where a small blaze caused by burning leaves was in progress. Some damage to a lattice fence in a minimal amount was the financial loss.

"THE MOST NEGLECTED AMERICAN"

Jefferson Davis

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

Davis Statue for Statuary Hall

Portraits from Tales "Jefferson Davis," Courtesy Blanton Duncan & Co.

Varina Howell Davis

Davis Memorial at Fairview, Ky.

WITHIN a short time these lines will be unveiled in Statuary Hall in the Capitol at Washington a bronze statue, the gift of the state of Mississippi, to the nation. It has been viewed in marble by Augustus Lukeman, the sculptor who is engaged in cutting from the rising rock of Stone mountain, near Atlanta, Ga., the martial figure that shall record the valor of the men who fought under the Stars and Bars in the greatest civil war in all history, the leaders of the Confederate States of America. Although the flags of Jefferson Davis will appear in the Cosmopolitan Johns program as was the presidency of the Confederacy, the new statue of him which is to have a place in Statuary hall will be three feet or so taller because he was the leader of a lost cause not because he was a great statesman.

"The most neglected man of his stature in American history" a recent biographer has called him, and this designation of Alfred Tam, in his "Jefferson Davis," the Ellen and Field published by Mission Bands and company, has received from the undeserved obscurity in which he was plunged one of the very few lasting rules on the American statesman since from 1865 to 1889, when he died in the serene of the Confederacy and at all was a leader of lost causes, undeserved by no and to find a sympathetic relief. It he forgets an occasionally ears.

But the most ludicrous that history has done Jefferson Davis has been in connection with statue as he was to be placed in Statuary hall, when Tyre calls "the twenty-four years of retirement, of which is true from 1865 until he died on May 11, 1889. What it has failed to do is to commend him for what he was during the 36 years of his statesmanship more before that time when he achieved several Democrats if to five times Fort Sumter. It was a curious example of the irony of fate that the origins of Jefferson Davis should have so closely resembled those of the opponent leader to this greatest of the wars. Davis was born in Kentucky a year before Lincoln was born in the same state. He sprang from the same stock as did Lincoln, for Jefferson Davis' mother, Jemima Davis, was a Kentucky restless pioneer of the old Southwest, adventurous, pugnacious, religious—and fighting very well not talking to himself out of a situation cause, unsentimental, for these were the days when the primitive day of the frontier." He contemporaries had gone to move his family across the state of Kentucky to Louisiana and finally into Wilkinson county, Miss. That move proved to be the crowning one in the career of Jefferson Davis, for this was the land of King Cotton and as Time says: "The transformation of the Davis family in one generation from raw-boned pioneers to the great planter and the growth of the patriarchal type, whereby slaveowners became a ruling class, because the slaveowners' religion—this transformation of expansion in one family is the story of the rise of the Lower South."

So Jefferson Davis became an aristocrat by marriage. He was twenty-three years old when he married Sarah Knox Taylor, daughter of Zachary Taylor, then a colonel of infantry and destined to be the next president but one. The marriage was a runaway affair. Taylor opposed it because he thought his daughter was too young and because he did not like the idea of having a son-in-law in the army. Davis resigned his commission and married the girl. Then he went to his cotton plantation on the Mississippi river, Davis Bend, and took to reading and studying. Although the fame of Jefferson Davis will appear to the Cosmopolitan Johns program as was the presidency of the Confederacy, the new statue of him which is to have a place in Statuary hall will be three feet or so taller because he was the leader of a lost cause not because he was a great statesman.

darties for the United States, but that dream was shattered in the defeat of the Confederacy. Davis was cleanly enough that of voters and congress of confederate made their climatic passage to the Pacific through Nebraska. It was one of nature's reasons and the loss of a future railroad or canal. Through a mind named Walker, who formulated doctrines to did a revolution in that country. Davis came close to realizing his aim, his status came to pass that fragmented, and only this scheme to create a system of influence of the South, but also that great plan of arterial rail building to the West.

The slavery dispute was impossible to reach an acute stage and the North opposed Davis' ambitions for the western expansion on the ground that it meant the inevitable extension of slavery into the new territory. In 1850 Davis was again in the senate. The war clouds were already beginning to gather and a commissioner was appointed to draw up a compromise to prevent the danger of a civil war. He was a member of that commission but before its plan was completed South Carolina had seceded and when Mississippi followed her out of the Union Davis resigned from the senate. He was ready to be reelected in 1857, serving until his state seceded from the Union in 1861. As senator he was the leader of the southern proslavery faction, taking the place lately vacant by Calhoun.

When Davis became President, all knew that Jefferson Davis would be a strong executive. Under him, as commander-in-chief of the army and navy, and head of the executive department, he would be the real head of the government. He appointed his cabinet, but it was generally understood that he would choose some to the casualty and shifted cabinet more than a dozen times during the war. His previous experience as chairman of the senate committee on military affairs to the armed land greatly helped to equip him for the important duties of his new appointment.

Davis' career as secretary of war in but little known to most Americans but it was upon his work in that post that his principal claim to being a great statesman rests. He instituted many new methods to replace the hereditary system of appointments in the army. He was the first to introduce rifles in the army, he was a pioneer in the use of iron clads, while the result that both were supported on that side of the Atlantic before they were put to the test of any similar instruction anywhere in the world. It is to Davis' credit that he was placed in charge of considering the Mexican claims against that country and his settlement of them averted the bombing of the mouths and bombardment of Vera Cruz.

As a director of an empire and a planner for it, Davis was keen-minded and far-sighted. In Washington Jefferson Davis' cabinet was a fashion and the lifting of any widely separated events and the interpretation of the immediate. He introduced methods into the country, hoping that they would solve the problems of travel and transportation across the vast southwestern states. He ordered the first survey for a route for a transcontinental railroad and is directly responsible for the "The military necessity for such passage of transportation and the need for speedy and rapid communication with the Pacific coast, if we are to maintain our continuance as a part of this Union, is apparent." He ever was alive to the feasibility of a Panama railroad under the control of the government.

But of all these, the thing which was foremost in his mind was the establishment of railroads. Southern ones connecting its ports. Southern and not any one would accept the terms. The states of the Union shutting their products through the blockade to the eastern coast would be an extensive, and, in the end, a fatal one. Cotton sent to Memphis or Charleston through Montgomery and Mobile would be a profitable one. A railroad one was planned through Jackson to Mobile. These railroads were to be the means of getting cotton to the Gulf. The roads would with the south and the West and would be adapted to handle trade distributed in the South instead of going to the East.

In order to carry out his plan, it was necessary to send troops of engineers along the three possible routes to the Pacific. Major Independence of the new West was then practically unexplored and held before the members of conference. The plan was for a road from the eastern states beginning with one-way through New Mexico as Arizona which, bounded by the provinces of land lying to the south and known as the Gadsden purchase, which was obtained from Mexico to facilitate its construction.

Government ships and railroads connecting points. One another's navy and military forces to be carried to success. It was another time that the states of southern confederacy were united. Almost two years of struggle and sacrifice. Then on April 9, 1865 Lee surrendered to Grant at Appomattox Court House and the Confederacy was dead.

Experiment Proves That "Mulching" Helps Crops

For many years Hawaiian sugar planters made a practice of hoeing the crop refuse, such as leaves and tops, between the rows of growing cane. This served the double purpose of conserving the moisture in the soil and keeping down the weed growth. Later the experiment was made of covering the ground between the rows with a certain grade of sawdust paper, and still later the cotton field was so successful when it was found that the stiff stalks of the cane would penetrate the paper, while weeds would not. These obvious progresses are known as mulching. The same thing is now being done with the pineapple crop, lanes being made in the paper for the cane again can grow through. Experiments made in the United States to mulching various vegetables are said to have resulted in production increases of from 30 to 50 per cent or more. It is said that 12 days after a rain, soil protected with paper mulch will contain as much as 30 per cent more moisture than unmulched and in the same vicinity.

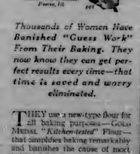
"No other Flour could make such light fluffy Biscuits," says Mrs. Schneider



"That's How I Knew It Was 'Kitchen-tested' Flour"

"My husband brought home a 'sack of flour' and put it in the bin. I did not see him do it and I did not ask him what kind it was. But when I made biscuits with this flour—which I consider the supreme test—they came out light and fluffy every time. Then I found the blue slip and I knew I was using Gold Medal Flour. It had met the test and come through with flying colors. No other flour can satisfy me now. I could tell Gold Medal 'Kitchen-tested' flour in the dark."

Thousands of Women Have Banished "Guess Work" From Their Baking. They now know they can get perfect results every time—that time is saved and worry eliminated.

THEY use a new-type flour for all baking purposes—Gold Medal "Kitchen-tested" Flour—that simplifies baking remarkably and banishes the cause of most baking failures.

Failures, experts found, were mostly due to the fact that two sacks of the same flour often acted differently, even with the same recipe . . . It was not uniform in oven action.

So now all Gold Medal Flour is "Kitchen-tested" before it comes to you. As each batch comes through the mill it is tested by actual baking—bread, cakes, biscuits, pastries—in an oven just like yours. Only flour which acts the same perfect way every time is allowed to go to you. So you know in advance exactly what your results will be.

TO DREAM OR NOT TO DREAM

For years two contrariwise sisters about 11 Rockefeller have drifted through the columns of trade papers. Each contains a high executive who runs in the old days of John D.'s prime position and who, sitting with his feet on the desk, gazing out of the window and dreaming—or now business deals.

In one story John D. relished him for wasting time. In the other he shuddered people away from him, saying "Let him dream! He made a million dollars for us lately just that way!"

After our editor had read these conflicting stories for years he stopped a bee to John D., Jr., asking which was true, and received a prompt reply from the latter's secretary. "Mr. Rockefeller, Jr., asks me to say that the stories referred to are true in both versions. He has been accustomed to spend a part of each day in meditation and prayer, which has often given currency."

However he does not advocate this in business thinking at noon or any of Pressing the present to the past to the war. It happened to be successful. It may be double or whether we in the last analysis, to success from Heaven any more than from Hell. Success is success. We were and are well able to make a success of life without Heaven. Either we need a moral code, or we don't. If we don't, it may be well to recall that Napoleon had many advantages over us, and that his lucid brain also had moments of fatigue. But the point is not this. His phrase "sought refinements" may be the really curious one. Where have nations deliberately sought refinements for themselves? Wherever did we get the reason for the existence of the king or the prime minister, and if you can certainly be not sure that he American would have the opportunity to do as much stuff, we are a party-ir people.—New York Herald Tribune.

GETTING RESULTS

Some years ago in Baltimore, Maryland, a Criminal Justice Commission was created with the object of "getting results" against racketeers and with almost unlimited authority to call a special army of police and judicial followers.

The seventh report has just been issued and should give pause to officials and citizens throughout the nation. It shows that 601 fewer serious crimes were committed in the city in 1929 than in 1928. Arrests were made in 53 per cent of the crimes reported, the highest record yet attained. Convictions resulted from 87 per cent of cases brought to trial, also a record.

The Commission in order to show the significance of these records, points to Baltimore with other cities. In Baltimore, 77 per cent of crimes were tried within three weeks of arrest; in Washington, while more is taken as a representative city, that time per cent was 42.4 per cent that time. In Baltimore, 58 per cent of those indicted for felonies were convicted; in New York, one of the vast sin-sort of waste nation in the statute books.

As long as wholesale law-making continues, crime will flourish.

LOOKING "UP"—AND "DOWN"

Some thirty years ago, when our grandsons "mauve decade" was nearing its end, and when the Spanish-American War and the political war platforms of William Jennings Bryan were the topics of the day, we made some in the haste of leaving "up" for our transportation. When ever we heard a noise along our highways and byways we looked "up." And more than likely as not that noise fancied, a carriage, the "car buggy." Or maybe it was one of those tall locomotives of the day, or a steamship with terribly tall smokestructures. And there were those of us who still remember the old big front-wheel bicycle.

In any event, everything was "high." It was the habit, and it was the vogue.

But of today we still look "up" at one of our many forms of transportation and see the airplane, it is now a matter of altitude and not of height.

In reality all of our modern forms of transportation have been reduced in height, and we figuratively look "down" now instead of "up." There is the low and rakish ocean liner with low smoke-stacks and superstructures; the long, low and powerful locomotives; and, lastly, the lower the airplane, the faster it usually is.

And now comes the low automobile, bringing with it the new principle of front-wheel-drive. A Mr. Andre, by long a power in the motor car industry, is generally accredited with introducing the front-wheel-drive principle. European drivers have grown accustomed to the type of passenger car, and the principle for some few years has been used in racing.

A salesman was proposing to his best girl.

"And, sweetheart," he concluded, "I'll lay my whole fortune at your feet."

"It isn't a very big fortune," she replied, "but I'll look awfully big beside your ft. Let me get the job!

ON FOREIGN ADVICE

At a recent dinner in Washington in the presence of President Hoover two foreign journalists, M. Wickham Steed, of London, and M. Andre Berard, of Paris, undertook to show that it was the duty of the United States to subordinate its freedom of action in the foreign field to the requirements of pawnbase fashionably debased. It is an old, old song, if not a sweet one, and will not alarm Americans who from the time of Citizen Genet have been listening to the advice of foreign visitors, who naturally put their own country's interest first.

AGRICULTURAL HAPPENINGS

By H. C. Hellesamp.

COLT BREAKING AND MULTIPLE HITCH DEMONSTRATION

Many farmers dread colt breaking more than anything else connected with farming. Often colts are not properly trained and cause much trouble thereafter. Yet it is rather a simple job if a regular colt breaking system is employed.

If you are interested in seeing a colt broken in a very few minutes and actually pulling a wagon, come to the following demonstrations and see H. P. Mosley, Specialist of Michigan State College, show you his system, at the farm of

At Boyne City, on Thursday, June 5th, located three miles south and west of advance on Wednesday afternoon, May 21st, at 10:00 o'clock sharp.

2nd Demonstration Orchard Bay Township, located three miles south and east of Charlevoix on Wednesday afternoon, May 21st at 2:00 o'clock but definite.

At all, the above places several colt breaking demonstrations will be shown, using 3 colts at each place. Many farms that are not assigned to these locations, please remember to know that the data compiled by the agricultural investigators is being made, and the material it has supplied is measuring the efficiency of our machinery for detecting and punishing crime, have had much to do with the improvement chronicled year after year."

Other communities and states, instead of adopting some laws to check attempt to stop crime, should observe what an intelligent legal practice can do to make business in administering justice.

MANUFACTURING CRIMINALS

The lawmakers of America have apparently gone into the business of manufacturing criminals.

During 1929, 45 states passed 16,-971 new laws out of a total of over 20,000 which were proposed. This is at the rate of 46 laws per day, including Sundays and holidays.

It is no wonder that practically every American city has a "crime wave" on its diagnosis. As a result we are burdened with the greatest weight of laws in world history—many of them obsolete, unenforcible and unenforcible. All of us are lawbreakers, for the simple reason that there is a law governing almost every human act.

Patrick Henry once said that one of the things necessary to the maintenance of free government was "frequent recurrence to fundamental principles." During the past year Government we have strayed afar from the fundamental principles established by the Founders of our republic. The spirit of the constitution has been violated time and again by fanatics and reformers.

As a result we have more crime than any other nation in the world. The cure is simple. Stop passing laws that exist against good citizens and get after the real criminals. Make Justice swift and sure. Do away with legal technicalities. Weed out the vast sin-sort of waste nation in the statute books.

As long as wholesale law-making continues, crime will flourish.

WHAT THE LEAGUE DOESN'T DO

An interesting sidelight on what the League of Nations is doing, and what it is failing to accomplish, is contained in a recent editorial in the newspaper LaPrensa, published at Buenos Aires, in the Argentine. The South American newspaper declares that the League has been a failure so far as promoting world politics is concerned, that it has been subtracting major problems and converting itself with minor affairs.

The newspaper declares that the League has been a failure in any efforts to bring the armaments of the world closer together and that it has not only failed to help but has even aggravated difficulties between Europe and the countries of the Old World to such an extent that the nations of Latin America no longer send delegates regularly to the principal conferences held under the auspices of the League. When such conferences are held, and the American viewpoint is presented, as usually continues, the discussions are such that they have practically no effect, rather than helped so far as an understanding between Europe and America is concerned.

It is declared that as a result, various countries, bitter enemies, are compelled to make agreements among themselves as there is no longer any hope of getting a measuring the efficiency of our machinery for detecting and punishing crime, have had much to do with the improvement chronicled year after year."

Other communities and states, instead of adopting some laws to check attempt to stop crime, should observe what an intelligent legal practice can do to make business in administering justice.

COUNTY GRANGES AWARD SPECIAL HONORS TO WINNERS

Each exhibit was carefully judged by a committee of three persons and the following is a list of the winners:

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

Frank P. Litschert

To note the steady drift in the sentiment of the American people against foreign entanglements in our international politics nothing is more significant than the official declarations of the two great political parties. Both of the platforms in 1928 declared against foreign entanglements. In view of past history, the most significant change, perhaps, is that in the official Democratic declaration. It will be remembered that back in 1920 the Democrats, officially, were for the League of Nations, and advocated admission to the League in the campaign. While the Republicans did not do this, there were a number of leaders who were regarded at the time as friendly to the League and who were not heartily in favor of making our independence from the League the paramount issue. Any election there was no question as to where the American people stood. Both parties have loyal and public sentiment has become entangling alliances.

The reduction of the voyage time to Valparaiso by five days is a notable accomplishment. It is not generally realized that Valparaiso is almost directly south of Washington. Closer neighborhood is a need of the Americas, and this new fast service, with sailings every fortnight, should serve that need.

Eighty years ago when the foundations of the Grace Line were laid on the west coast of South America the most traveled route was around the Horn by clipper ships. When the Panama Railroad was built there began some transhipment south from the Isthmus, but windjammers remained the chief carriers. Steamers began to navigate the Straits of Magellan, but the way was too long for trade with North America. Then came the Panama Canal, rendering more possible the opportunities for trade between the United States and sister republics to the south. Generations of navigators have dreamed of the Panama Canal and plot that has never before been brought to the screen!

We wish to thank the judges, Mrs. Shanahan, Mrs. Pennington and Doctor Wilkinson, who so kindly gave their time to read and judge the papers.

Protecting Health in Youth

Health is, no doubt, the most important factors in a child's life. A man cannot be successful unless he has a good education, and he has this he must have good health. Poor health is a thing to be prevented not treated after it has developed. A man once said "Without health life is not life." Success is all we live for and to have success we must have health.

One of the best ways to define tuberculosis is to-avoid. If a person loses weight has no appetite and fails to start a new day because he is tired the matter should be looked into, for in all probability the "tubercle bacillus" is at work.

Tuberculosis is decreasing in United States by about three points a year. It is apparent if this rate of improvement continues, tuberculosis will be rare in about fifty years. The peak of all the deaths caused by tuberculosis is between twenty and fifty years of age. The "tubercle bacillus" is found mostly in the systems of consumptives and in milk from tuberculosis cows.

A person who has tuberculosis and wants to get well in the quickest and best way possible is to a sanitorium.

No medicine alone will cure tuberculosis, though remedies prescribed by physicians are helpful in relieving various symptoms. The only remedy from which result can always be guaranteed is rest, good food fresh air, and sunshine of which rest is the most important. When bodily energy is not spent in work or play it can be used in building up the tissues affected by the tuberculous germs.

Good food means three meals a day based on a properly balanced diet of meat, vegetables, fruit and milk. If every boy and girl of America will follow out this simple rule in a short fifty year tuberculosis will be a rare thing.

CHARLEVOIX SCHOOL NEWS

We assure ourselves that the cure of illiteracy and the fundamentals of education are the three R's. To this we must add one more R, and that is Responsibility—Responsibility to the community."—President Hoover.

Mr. Otterbein gave another of his interesting talks before the assembly Monday, taking for his subject the chief aims of education.

Learning reading and writing and algebra is not the main thing in education nowadays, he said, but emphasis is also laid upon worthy home membership—getting the student to assume some responsibility himself, in the home, as well as in the class room.

A boy who does not take some responsibility upon himself will never amount to anything soon."

Mr. Otterbein told of a boy in another town whom he asked to leave school because of his inaptitude for work, and because of the discipline which he created regularly. At home this boy refused to do work of any kind, neglecting even such chores as bring in wood and water. Instead, he spent most of his time and his father's money in nonsense. If the school could develop a spirit of worthy home membership in such boys as these, it would be doing humanity a real service—placing slackers into workers.

In contrast with this example Mr. Otterbein told of another boy who rose at a very early hour even on the coldest winter days to build the fire for his mother, and always arrived at school by daybreak after having walked the two or three miles from his home. None of us were surprised to learn that Mr. Otterbein was the boy in the story, for such a spirit is the one we would expect to find in our energetic superintendent.

Friendship

Emerson tells us that "Our intellectual and active powers increase with our affection.

Imagine yourself lost, downcast, sad, left alone by all your supposedly good friends, and suddenly find that one person has faith in you; that one person believes you capable of trying again. Will you not then feel the wisdom of a heavenly and the strength and power of a Hercules? Will you not go forth all your efforts to try and justify the faith of that friend?

If this is true, why is it that we take friendship so lightly, when the love of a friend should be cherished more than all the gold on earth. Why do we not esteem friendship more highly? When the love and faith of a friend can lift you to unscalable heights, why do you not treasure that friendship above all things? Possibly it is because you think you have more friends than you truly have. It is sometimes said that a friend is one who knows your faults and still loves you. Suppose that gossip, that deadly weapon of the civilized world, should accuse you of some unforgivable act; suppose that you had even committed an unforgivable act. Then you might test the true friendship of your pal. For even though he did not approve of your actions, your real friend would continue to put faith in you. He would no doubt but would trust blindly. And eventually that trust would bring back to you the trust of others for as the proabilities either of his friendship or the weather, not meeting so many beamings to know what Senator Borah thought about a matter. Wrong, using unduly sensitive, it may be should not whether Mr. Steed would be considered reflecting policy in the opinions of the king or the prime minister, and if you certainly be not sure that he American would have the opportunity to do as much stuff, we are a party-ir people.—New York Herald Tribune.

GETTING RESULTS

Some years ago in Baltimore, Maryland, a Criminal Justice Commission was created with the object of "getting results" against racketeers and with almost unlimited authority to call a special army of police and judicial followers.

The seventh report has just been issued and should give pause to officials and citizens throughout the nation. It shows that 601 fewer serious crimes were committed in the city in 1929 than in 1928. Arrests were made in 53 per cent of the crimes reported, the highest record yet attained. Convictions resulted from 87 per cent of cases brought to trial, also a record.

The Commission in order to show the significance of these records, points to Baltimore with other cities. In Baltimore, 77 per cent of crimes were tried within three weeks of arrest; in Washington, while more is taken as a representative city, that time per cent was 42.4 per cent that time. In Baltimore, 58 per cent of those indicted for felonies were convicted; in New York, one of the vast sin-sort of waste nation in the statute books.

As long as wholesale law-making continues, crime will flourish.

TO DREAM OR NOT TO DREAM

For years two contradictory stories about D Rockefeller have drifted through the columns of trade papers. Each contained a quotation who used to sit on a box in front of the old days at John D.'s prime. One was to the effect that he spent his days gazing out of the window and dreaming out new business deals.

In one story John D rebuked him for wasting time. To the other he chuckled people away from him, saying "Let him dream. He made a million dollars for us lately just that way."

After our editor had read these conflicting stories for years he thought a line to John D., asking which was true, and received a prompt reply from the factory secretary. "Mr. Rockefeller, Jr., asks me to say that the matters referred to have no direct connection, but many of the other 'yarns' about his father which have been given currency."

However, the general impression is that in business thinking is more rare. Possibly it was so in the days of the old man, but in this day it happens. It may be also that in business, as in other walks of life, the tempo is so fast that there is no time to dream. Perhaps we are all too busy to dream or not to dream? To indge by the hurrying, scurrying, get fat set, or to reflect when working? To be something like a machine—being a highly efficient machine—or to be a man, with a brain, questioning ever and anon the effectiveness of the machine we may be improved or perchance abolished altogether? That's the question. There is only one answer, in the long run. The way upward is by thought.

As a great railroad president said to the son for whom he had made a place in his office: "Dick, Richard is nothing to do, don't read—think!"

ON FOREIGN ADVICE

At a recent dinner in Washington in the presence of President Hoover two foreign journalists, Mr. Wickham Steed, of London, and M. Andre Bernard, of Paris, undertook to show that it was the duty of all United States to subordinate its freedom of action in the foreign field to the requirements of powers less fortunately situated. It is an old, old song, if not a sweet one, and will not alarm Americans who from the time of Citizen Genet have been listening to the advice of foreign visitors, who naturally put their own country's interests one.

Your present position," said M Clemenceau, in unanswerable in the logic of fact, would," if literally followed, be to take the United States as a nation to get from proud England what it can get only by the consent of the nations of the world. He is quite right, and we are very lucky to have had a strong unentangled position. M Clemenceau has studied naval problems, and he should know that we were able to build a larger fleet than Britain's, but did not. In the respect, too, our attitude toward for the Kellogg pact was unprecedented. Canada and even Australia have not gone as far as we have. If we had not only declined to take advantage long our group, but were so far off to foster the League's alliances we would be doing something more unexampled and unfriendly—so unfriendly that the League's members would be glad to have us oppose it.

Mr Steed has an equally interesting number of reasons for not being "pulled and chained into party of the League," but he, too, is willing to go to the limit of responsibility. Planning as this person is in the war, it happens "shows" now instead of "up." There is the low and rakish ocean liner with low smoke-stacks and superstructure. The long, low and powerful locomotive, and, lastly the low of the airplane, the faster it usually is.

And now comes the low automobile, bringing with it the new principle of front-wheel-drive. A. M. Andreau, long a mover in the motor car industry, is generally accredited with forestalling the front-wheel-drive principle. European drivers have grown accustomed to this type of passenger car, and the principle for some few years has been used in racing.

A salesman was proposing to his best girl.

And, sweetheart," he finished, "I'll lay my whole fortune at your feet."

"It isn't very big for fortune," the red-headed kid.

I know, dear," he replied, but I will look awfully big beside your little."

COLT BREAKING AND MULTIPLE HITCH DEMONSTRATION

Many farmers dread colt breaking more than anything else connected with farming. Often colts are not properly trained and cause much trouble thereafter. Yet it is rather a simple job if a regular colt breaking system is employed.

If you are interested in seeing a colt broken in only a few minutes and then hitched to a wagon, come to the following demonstrations to be given by H. P. Mosby, Specialist of Michigan State College, show you his system, at the farm of

It is declared that as a result, various nations have themselves to make agreements among themselves, if there is no longer any hope of getting agreements through the League. That august body, if it desires to continue as a powerful institution, must find new means of increasing the international spirit of amity among the nations.

All of which is interesting in that Senator Arthur Vandenberg, for one point, or at least one South American viewpoint. It is true, however, that the Senator from Michigan has continued existence to the fact that it has not attempted a settlement of the problems among nations. As a matter of fact the League is made up of so many different nations of various races, colors and traditions as to say nothing of national traditions and policies either, it would be almost impossible for it to accomplish anything effective in an international way and continue to exist. Besides the very fact but it is a League of Nations makes it no compulsion an affair. Nations come and go according to things which its originators hoped it might accomplish.

So far as the United States is concerned we have no desire that the League of Nations should accomplish anything to do with tariffs, especially our tariffs which we are capable of handling for ourselves. That is why, in the past, we have been careful in making international agreements.

AMERICAN TRADE ROUTES

The merchant marine act in support of American-owned ships is bearing fruit. Sailing from New York recently on her maiden voyage the new Grace liner Santa Clara was scheduled to arrive at the Panama Canal in five days, at Callao in seven days, and at Valparaiso in sixteen days, as against six, twelve and twenty-one days, respectively, under the old schedule.

This quickened intercourse with the other Americas is the result of the new national shipping policy. The mail contracts and construction loan provisions of the Jones-White merchant marine act of 1928 are at last giving American shipping an equal opportunity. Congress has provided the means of equalizing the competitive disadvantage under which the ships of the American merchant marine.

The reduction of the voyage time to Valparaiso by five days is a notable accomplishment. It is not generally realized that Valparaiso is almost directly south of Washington. Closer neighborliness is a need of the Americas, and the new fast service, with sailings every fortnight, should serve that need.

Eighty years ago when the foundations of the Grace Line were laid the west coast of South America, the most traveled route was around the Horn by clipper ships. When the Panama Railroad was built there began some transhipment south from the Isthmus, but windjammers remained the chief carriers. Steamers began to navigate the Straits of Magellan, but the way was too long for trade with North America. Then came the Panama Canal, rendering more accessible the opportunities for trade between the United States and sister republics to the south. Americans were surprised and pleased from the time of the Panama Canal that it has not attempted a settlement of the problems among nations. As a matter of fact the League is made up of so many different nations of various races, colors and traditions as to say nothing of national traditions and policies either, it would be almost impossible for it to accomplish anything effective in an international way and continue to exist. Besides the very fact but it is a League of Nations makes it no compulsion an affair. Nations come and go according to things which its originators hoped it might accomplish.

So far as the United States is concerned we have no desire that the League of Nations should accomplish anything to do with tariffs, especially our tariffs which we are capable of handling for ourselves. That is why, in the past, we have been careful in making international agreements.

WHAT THE IDEA

CUE DOESN'T DO

An interesting sidelight on what the League of Nations is doing, and again is failing to accomplish, is contained in a recent editorial in the newspaper LaPrensa, published at Buenos Aires, in the Argentine. The South American newspaper declares that the League has been a failure as far as pursuing world policies is concerned, that it has been exclusively engaged in the business of tracking major problems and controlling small petty matters.

The newspaper declares that the League has been a failure in any efforts to bring nations of the world closer together and that it has not only failed to help but has ever aggravated difficulties between Europe and the countries of the Old World to such an extent that the nations of Latin America no longer send delegates regularly to the pan-American conferences held under the auspices of the League. When such conferences are held, and the American viewpoint is presented, LaPrensa continues, the discussions are such that considerable time and energy are wasted rather than helped so far as an understanding between Europe and the Western Hemisphere is concerned.

It is declared that as a result, various nations have themselves to make agreements among themselves, if there is no longer any hope of getting agreements through the League. That august body, if it desires to continue as a powerful institution, must find new means of increasing the international spirit of amity among the nations.

All of which is interesting in that Senator Arthur Vandenberg, for one point, or at least one South American viewpoint. It is true, however, that the Senator from Michigan has continued existence to the fact that it has not attempted a settlement of the problems among nations. So far as the United States is concerned we have no desire that the League of Nations should accomplish anything to do with tariffs, especially our tariffs which we are capable of handling for ourselves. That is why, in the past, we have been careful in making international agreements.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

Frank P. Litschert

To note the steady drift in the sentiment of the American people against foreign entanglements in our international politics nothing is more significant than the official declarations of the two great political parties. Both of the platforms in 1928 declared against foreign entanglements. In view of past history, the most significant advance, perhaps, is that in the official Democratic declaration. It will be remembered that back in 1920 the Democrats, officially, were for the League of Nations, and advocated adherence to the League in the campaign. While the Republicans did not do that, there were a number of leaders who were regarded at the time as friendly to the League and who were not heartily in favor of making our independence from the League the paramount issue. After election there was no question as to where the American people stood. Both parties declared that the public sentiment has become much more firmly fixed against foreign entanglements than it was before the World Court issue are no longer partisan questions.

It is interesting to note therefore, the unanimity in the support of the Democratic platform by the late national platform. While criticising the policy of the Republican administration, it was natural, the Democrats declared for "sufficiency of war and an adequate navy," for "economy and reduction of expenditures," "freedom from entangling alliances with foreign nations," with the strictness or internal politics, and for "a reciprocal treaty in favor of international agreements for the reduction of world armaments; in support of the Monroe Doctrine as a "cardinal principle of our government." In the matter of foreign cooperation the platform recommends: "full, free and open cooperation with all other nations for the promotion of peace through out the world."

It will be noted that there is no mention of the League of Nations or the World Court. There is no direct mention of either of these two institutions in the Republican platform except for the following paragraph: "The Republican Party maintains the traditional American policy of non-interference in the internal affairs of other nations. This government has definitely refused membership in the League of Nations and to assume any obligation under the covenant of the League. In this we stand."

Truly, it may be said, times have changed since 1920. The old issues are changing, too, not only in our foreign policies but in economic affairs. The tariff as a political issue is changing. The opponents of protection have allotted their methods, and assaults are being developed in new directions. The tariff is no longer the partisan issue that it once was. Neither is the problem of keeping Uncle Sam out of foreign entanglements.

The willingness of young men to defend their country is taking progress for better citizenship is proof of a good trait in the generation on which will presently devolve the maintenance of our social and political institutions.

I commend the Citizens' Camps to all fathers and mothers and to all young men of "age to go." I do hope and belief that the camps will be as beneficial as useful in the future as they have been in the past.

One of the best ways to define tuberculosis is to-breed. If a person loses weight has no appetite and hates to start a new day because he is tired the matter should be looked into, for in all probability the "tuberle bacillus" is at work.

Tuberculosis is decreasing in United States by about three deaths a year; it is apparent if this rate of improvement continues, tuberculosis will be rare in about fifty years. The peak of all the deaths caused by tuberculosis is between twenty and fifty years of age. The "tuberele bacillus" is found mostly in the form of consumption and in milk from tuberculous cows.

A person who has tuberculosis wants to get well in the quickest and easy way possible go to a sanatorium.

No medicine alone will cure tuberculosis, though remedies prescribed by physicians are helpful in relieving various symptoms. The only remedy from which result can always be guaranteed is rest, good food, fresh air, and sunshine of which rest is the most important. When bodily energy is not spent in work or play it can be used in building up the tissues affected by the tuberculous germs.

Good food means three meals a day based on a properly balanced diet of fresh vegetables fruit and milk. If every boy and girl of America will follow out this simple plan, in about fifty year tuberculosis will be a rare thing.

CHARLEVOIX SCHOOL NEWS

"We assure ourselves that the cure of illiteracy and the fundamentals of education are the three R's. To this we must add one other R, and that is Responsibility—Responsibility to the community."—President Hoover.

Mrs. Otterbein gave another of his interesting talks before the assembly Monday, taking for his subject "The chief aim of education."

Learning reading and writing and algebra is not the main thing in education nowadays, he said, but emphasis is also laid upon worthy home membership—getting the student to assume some responsibility himself in the home, as well as in the class room.

A boy who does not take some social mobility upon himself will never amount to anything worth while Mr. Otterbein told of a boy in another town whom he asked to leave school because of his laughing for work, and because of the disturbances which he created regularly. At home this boy refused to do work of any kind, neglecting even such duties as bringing in wood and water. Instead, he spent most of his time and his father's money in pool rooms. If the school could develop a spirit of worthy home membership in such boys as these, it would be doing humanity a real service—turning slackers into workers.

To contrast with this example, Mr. Otterbein told of another boy, who rose at a very early hour even on the coldest winter days to build the fire for his mother, and always arrived at school by day-break, after having so set the two or three miles from his home. None of us were surprised to learn that Mr. Otterbein was the boy in the story, for such a spirit is the one we would expect to find in our energetic superintendent.

of large roman letters which are printed upon a ribbon of gummed paper tape at the receiving station from telegrams are transmitted. The messages print simultaneously on the sending machine at the sending station and are received on a machine at the receiving station. At the sending station, the tape from the printer falls into a tape receptacle where it can later be referred to if necessary. At the receiving station, the gummed paper tape upon which the messages are received is pulled through a moistener so that the tape can be glued to the standard receiving blanks. A small thumbscrew is used by the receiving operator who skillfully applies the tape to the telegraph blank and cuts the tape whenever necessary to put it in his standard message form.

For the past twenty years, various types of automatic telegraph equipment have been used in telegraph communication in the Western Union offices in the larger cities, where an enormous amount of messages are handled daily, but the machines in operation here are the very latest developments in printer telegraph equipment. The Simplex printer conducts greatly to speed and accuracy as well as to ease of operation. It has been adopted for general use by the Western Union and machines are being installed as rapidly as they can be manufactured. The local office is especially fortunate in having this new facility in readiness for the busy summer season.

In an interview with O. M. Allen, manager of the local office, today, she stated that Miss Erma Carey and Miss Norene Morse, who are now in training at the Company's school, will soon be in Charlevoix to assist as Simplex operators.

FARM BARN OF CHARLES WILES IN RUINS

The farm barn of Charles Wiles located four miles southwest of Charlevoix on U. S. 31 burned to the foundation Monday forenoon, together with a considerable quantity of farm machinery.

There was some live stock housed in the building, all of which was taken out without injury.

Mr. Wiles was working in one of the fields when the fire, which is of unknown origin, was discovered, but is far advanced to combat effectively.

"Why do you rise so early in the morning?"

"I have to get down town early in order to park my car."

"What do you do with the extra time before working hours?"

"O I take a street car home and have breakfast."

Protecting Health in Youth

Health is, no doubt, the most important factors in a child's life. A boy cannot be successful unless he has a good education and to have this he must have good health. Poor health is a thing to be prevented not treated after it has developed. A man once said "Without health "tis not life." Success is all we live for and to have success we must have health.

One of the best ways to define tuberculosis is to-breed. If a person loses weight has no appetite and hates to start a new day because he is tired the matter should be looked into, for in all probability the "tuberle bacillus" is at work.

Imagine yourself busy, discouraged, left alone by all your supposedly good friends, and suddenly find that one person has faith in you; that one person believes you capable of trying again. With you out there, feel the wisdom of a Socrates and the strength and power of a Hercules? Will you not get forth all you efforts to try and justify the faith of that friend?

If this is true, why is it that folks friendship, as lightly, when the love of a friend should be cherished more than all the gold on earth. Why do we not esteem friendship more highly? Must the love and faith of a friend can lift you to unaccountable heights; why do you not treasure that friendship above all things? Possibly it is because you think you have more friends than you truly have. It is sometimes said that a friend is one who knows your faults and still loves you. Suppose that gossip, that deadly weapon of the civilized world, should accuse you of some unaccountable crime, but you had even committed that unforgivable act. Then you might test the true friendship of your pal. For even though he did not approve of your actions, your real friend would continue to put faith in you. He would not doubt but would trust blindly. And eventually that truth would bring back to you the trust of others for it would make you exert yourself to your utmost not for yourself but for that trusting friend.

Truly it is said that friendship is better than gold, for friendship is golden.—Ula McMillan.

SUCH IS LIFE — Thrifty Idea!

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

By GRANT DIXON.

Live Exhibit.

The American Museum of Natural History, a vast and impressive hall of dead things, has now its live exhibition. Everything from fish to elephant as it's dinosaur exhibit. A few live snakes are no great trouble to a well organized museum, but the Natural History museum has been greatly upset, a gutter snake decided to have a family, and thought it necessary to have some living snakes to feed them on, something like mother, they get into everything. Then mother, out of their own inclination, came to the front. The spirits of the museum have been unnerved. It taxed its building facilities. They aren't sure that all three have conformed yet. Nobody is actually sad.

Roof Scene.

As I sit in my office, I can see on the roof of a house on 42nd st., a man practicing a speech. He is barefoot and walks, facing to hide himself behind a chimney. He is holding if copy of the speech in one hand, and while he is rehearsing with the other, and is in his thinking he's natural fire, and gesticulating like mad. He's going to make a speech, something like mother, they get into everything. Then mother, out of their own inclination, came to the front. The spirits of the museum have been unnerved. It taxed its building facilities. They aren't sure that all three have conformed yet. Nobody is actually sad.

Bob's Dream.

Robert Brinkley relates that he had a dream the other night.

"I dreamed," he told me, "that I was sitting on a ledge in a canyon, between two buildings over a thruway. The whole hell thing got to the point where one building walked the other a block, when I woke up. I looked at the clock, it was eight-twenty. It's true. So I decided I had time to go back to sleep and hear the rest of the show."

New Vogue.

It is the masculine to wear shoes to relieve among the sanity. Discussion that runs up and down Park avenue is a ridiculous and gasoline buggy of the vintage of 1907 or 1908. The occupant thereof will not be a gentleman, as one might suppose, but one of the upper crust and the most fashionable of the moment. The rich, and particularly the nouveau riche, have adopted the fad of wearing and sporting monstrous pairs of shoes.

Slight Error.

A young New York college youth, not recently received a issue of those cute little monograms that he claims appropriate, all due to the carelessness of a sweetie pulled on a disturbed newspaper. The newsie was in a hurry, and in selling down the house of the day at 8, things got the better of him, and the lines read that Smythes associate dean of women at a college, had many male friends. The rewrite man thought the information to be that Smythes is unmarried, so went to work.

It is not only commendable; it is worthy the name of the human life more than flowers for which the convalescent reward

Written for the Sentinel:

Facts and Fancies at the Early Settlement of the Pine River Region

By a Citizen

The hasty abandonment by the fishermen of their quarters left Pine River a sort of deserted village—at last it was a perfectly deserted settlement; for we have no account of any one visiting it until away in the spring of 1854, when George Pearson and family arrived from Beaver Island everything in and around the homes of the former settlers seemed to be just as they had been left, everything indicating a hurried packing up on the part of the former settlers. Mr. Pearson took possession of one of the vacant houses on the north side of the river, and at once set about clearing off and preparing for a permanent home now owned by John S. Dixon. In two weeks after the arrival of Pearson, Calvin B. Cook and family came in from the South Pine River. These came in a small schooner sailed the by Hollpike, and remained with the other of the vacant houses on the north bank as a temporary home for Cook. Cole also commenced to make improvements on land now owned by Dixon. This was the commencement of what is known as the modern settlement, as both Pearson and Cole belonged to that description.

And now I would say, that no matter what may be told, or what about their belief in, and their practice of polygamy, and other things, that to almost every one, of the age of the world, look ridiculously, yet under complex ca to say that in most every case, with the exception, perhaps, of their first prophet, Joseph Smith, they were all men of ability, and their followers, with exceptions, industrious, frugal. We doubt whether there is, at the present time another man who could take the same number of people from the different parts of the world, and organize them and keep them together under such perfect discipline as does Brigham Young his church of the Latter-day Saints. He has held them until quite lately under perfect control, both in temporal and spiritual matters, though of late it is said there is quite an undulation on the part of some of his followers to break away from his peculiar teaching. On Beaver Island as at Salt Lake, the word of the prophet was law, and we have heard those say, who knew Strang, that he was a very intelligent man, and in action and appearance was the perfect gentleman, was brilliant in conversation, able and strong in argument, well calculated for the free rank of society, and through the force of his natural ability would naturally be looked to as a sort of leader. Under his supervision whisky drinking was banished from the Island, and instead of the thrilltion, drunken place it was at the time of his and his followers, it soon assumed the appearance of a quiet, new settlement, the members of which were sober, industrious people. But this is wandering from our subject, so we, will return to the little settlement at Pine River where we left Pearson and Cook at work in the erection of houses, and other labors connected with the preparation of a home in a new place.

The fact of their selecting this locality for their home would seem to have been to some of the Gentile settlers on Beaver Island a matter of wonder, for in no other part of the Grand Traverse Region was a better location for the general agriculturist, than on the mouth of Pine Lake; the soil varying at different points from sandy loam to deep clay. And the site they selected for their buildings showed that they had also a taste for the grand and beautiful. They did not build near the shore of Lake Michigan, nor on the banks of Pine River, but selected that overlooking Pine Lake, where they could have continually before their eyes one of the grandest pictures in the whole grand pictures gallery of nature.

Through the early part of the summer, Pearson had got the logs and timber together, erected a house and had it almost completed, when the fire from his fallow took into the woods, and in the course of a few hours, burned his new house to the ground, in a few moments destroying the result of many a hard day's work. Nothing daunted, he again began to collect material for another house, but before all things were ready for the raising of the new house, his son, who had been with him during the summer, had gone back to Beaver Island, having no one to assist in the work of raising the building but Cole and a daughter of Pearson's and as the last log on the end of the building was being raised to its place, an accident happened that came near reducing their force to but two. One end of the timber slipped, and as it came down struck the young woman on the head inflicting her pretty severely, but not fatally. Notwithstanding the misfortune each of them had all at once a good substantial house overlooking Pine Lake, where it stands today. At the moment in what a few can do when they take hold of anything in were entertained by his friends that real cranium. In the fall they received an addition to their num bers, by the arrival of Medad Thompson and family and widow King. These first comers in their new home must have been rather lonesome and dreary, but though, in numbers, perhaps the hope that in ever whispering to us, that there are better things in store for us, brightened the dull hours by pointing to them the bright future that was in store for them. In the spring of 1855 they received quite an addition to their numbers by the arrival of Adam Sol and David Sorrel, who both selected claims at different points around Pine Lake, but as at all times, wherever the sons of God would be gathered together the devil would also appear to be on hand, so in the same way in regard to the Gentiles no odds how they might go to form a settlement, in a little time the hated Gentile would present himself.

On the 14th day of May, 1855, Jonn S. Dixon, J. E. May and H. A. Wolcott landed at the river, much to the astonishment of the old settlers, in a small schooner sailed the by Hollpike, and remained with the other of the vacant houses on the north bank as a temporary home for Cole. Cole also commenced to make improvements on land now owned by Dixon. This was the commencement of what is known as the modern settlement, as both Pearson and Cole belonged to that description.

And now I would say, that no matter what may be told, or what about their belief in, and their practice of polygamy, and other things, that to almost every one, of the age of the world, look ridiculously, yet under complex ca to say that in most every case, with the exception, perhaps, of their first prophet, Joseph Smith, they were all men of ability, and their followers, with exceptions, industrious, frugal. We doubt whether there is, at the present time another man who could take the same number of people from the different parts of the world, and organize them and keep them together under such perfect discipline as does Brigham Young his church of the Latter-day Saints. He has held them until quite lately under perfect control, both in temporal and spiritual matters, though of late it is said there is quite an undulation on the part of some of his followers to break away from his peculiar teaching. On Beaver Island as at Salt Lake, the word of the prophet was law, and we have heard those say, who knew Strang, that he was a very intelligent man, and in action and appearance was the perfect gentleman, was brilliant in conversation, able and strong in argument, well calculated for the free rank of society, and through the force of his natural ability would naturally be looked to as a sort of leader. Under his supervision whisky drinking was banished from the Island, and instead of the thrilltion, drunken place it was at the time of his and his followers, it soon assumed the appearance of a quiet, new settlement, the members of which were sober, industrious people. But this is wandering from our subject, so we, will return to the little settlement at Pine River where we left Pearson and Cole at work in the erection of houses, and other labors connected with the preparation of a home in a new place.

Village Council—At the council Saturday evening, a sidewalk was ordered built on the east side of Bridge street, and sidewalk to be eight feet wide, of two men plank, upon three 4x4 stringers.

The marshal was instructed to purchase a pair of handcuffs and a "come-along" and present a bill for the same to the council.

The State Roads. — The State Board of Control have adopted the report of Commissioner Hartsuff, recommending the construction of a State Road from South Arm to Boyne Falls, and one from Boyne to intersect the Petoskey and Gaylord State Roads, and the roads will be built as soon as the usual routine of contract letting has been gone through with. These roads will improve of great benefit in the development of the country through which they will pass.

FORTY YEARS AGO

A. R. Upright leaves for Portland, Oregon.

Alex Rosenthal will occupy the E. M. Clark residence on Main street this week.

The editor regained his thumb in time to vote at the township meeting, and is slightly sore on account, in a physical sense.

The following parish belonging to the Sheboygan Deanery, held a convention at Ada M. Inman, teacher, every member present—so, lately, for the purpose of choosing Mary E. Lothrop Hamlin, Nellie Hattie, Myrtle Moore, Bertha Howe and Lottie Rowlands.

Burgess Mill Burned Again

E. H. Burgess' steam saw-mill, in Banks, was totally destroyed by fire yesterday at 1 o'clock.

The mill was but ready for repairs, after Mr. Burgess and some of the men were absent from the premises.

Mr. Burgess seems to be more unfortunate than the average of mill men as this is the fourth time his mill has been destroyed by fire.

Beaver Island
Beaver Island, Mich.

Dear Mr. Editor:

Supposing you all over! You will hardly recognize old Beaver Island any more. Not to speak of a dozen new private dwellings, numerous and houses which are going up, the public improvements are really startling. The old log house which stands in the street, disfiguring the beautiful village of St. James, will have to go as soon as Mr. McCann, the present owner of the Booth property takes possession of it. He is always loaded with liberality toward his customers, and will give the use of his steam engine, as publicly recognized, on the 4th of April, at the annual township meeting in Boyne Valley the following resolution was adopted:

"Resolved, That a vote of thanks be tendered to the unselfish citizens of Beaver Valley to Willard A. Smith, editor of the Charlevoix Sentinel, for the real manifested by him toward obtaining an appropriation from the general government for the improvement of Charlevoix harbor."

On the 10th of April the great crisis was safely passed, and Charlevoix was made a government harbor of the second class. The appropriation but fell, which included Charlevoix by two votes.

The goal was reached! That for which we had so long and so faithfully striven was now in the place of our harbor under the fostering care of the National government.

The Hall has been thoroughly overhauled by the new proprietor, Mr. C. C. Gallagher. The walls and ceiling have been newly painted, and the wardrobe of our venerable Rev. Fr. Zugelder, will be models though of a few more pegs before the fall dancing ball don't blong just exactly to a priest's domain.

The old Boyle school has been transformed into a chapel and is fitted up very comfortably, and a man is read every morning.

The greenhouse, formerly the Boyle residence, looks now very fine and fashionable inside and out (minded high-kind. There no four children are living and music is to be heard all day long, as one of the sisters gives piano and organ lessons, free of charge, of course, as sisters do everything. She has many pupils —old women and young girls.

Upon the sandy hill the Court House and will is now a school house with two grades. One is conducted by public school by a sister—where the prisoners were kept (not once) as a sectarian school, by our gracious Sister Superior.

The road through the very beautiful groves will become really a metropolitan drive after some holes we filled up.

The old church, where the unforgotten Rev. Fr. Peter Gallagher preached for 30 years, is changed. Of course, strangers believe a structure of this shape to be a Leadville town hall; but no, it is a church, and a good one too, with an artistic altar, a patented hot air heater, gallery, organ and plastered all over. This big loft gave many boys work all winter for spot cash.

Below the church is located the old school house—a shade, a seeing thereof. Rev. Fr. Peter Gallagher, No. 1. Peaine township, a real Longfellow's "Village American School House." It is intended to put up a new, big house, with the latest, two-room rooms, for two teachers in two grades. Another grade is to be added each eight or nine months a year. The originator of this symbiotic plan is Mr. Owen Gallagher, and it is only the question how the people of that district can raise money required. Because, beside the special tax for the new building, the permanent taxes would be four times higher than ever before and would exceed the limit of school taxes allowed by law, by far.

At present only one among the sisters has a certificate, No. 3. By last our progressive Rev. Fr. Zugelder has promised to bring over a few more sisters.

For public amusement of the season it is a little early yet, but I am sorry to state that there are signs that base ball, lawn tennis, rowing and other healthy as well as joyful outdoor exercises will be a little neglected this season. However an ice-cream parlor, with party and so-cial, will be started, which we heard lately in order to get our share of the summer visitors, hitherto unknown to this island.

Yours truly, St. James.

What do the milkmen see at 5 o'clock in the New York scene in one of the unique bits of atmosphere in "Hard to Get," a First National Vitaphone picture which is to head the bill at the Palace Theatre, May 15-16.

Dorothy Mackaill, star of the film, and Charles Delaney, her leading man, do a bit of exploring while New York sleeps. So does the villain, Edmund Burns.

And Maxine Leslie Fazenda, Papa James Finlayson, and Kid Brother Jack Oakie do not likewise when until six-ish.

New York at four a. m. is such a strange sight that Dan Sayre, who directed the picture, went to the city with his assistant especially to see what was happening during that hour in the locales of the story.

The plot of "Hard to Get" deals with a roaring's still-hunt for a millionaire on Fifth Avenue, and her affair with the garage mechanic and bosom buddy. It abounds in comedy and human interest.

IN BAD TASTE

We dislike to charge a distinguished genius with impudence, but we feel that no testimony should be experienced in declaring that. H. Wickham Steed, of the editorial staff of the London Times, was guilty of shockingly bad taste when he registered with American newspaper editors at Washington, the other day, a complaint against American propaganda. In the first place, there is no foundation for the complaint that our businesslike. Steed wants to know how soon will it be if we all get out in the spirit of the Kellogg pact, that anybody who runs against that movement will be told that they will not have American newspapers for their friends? The reason for that is that whatever Europe accepts the spirit of the Kellogg pact and pays it more than mere lip service, there will be universal respect for it in the United States. Until then, we cannot afford to believe in fairy stories and hint curtsies to the stubborn realism with which Europe seeks to hamstring the New World into saccharine idealism. Needless to say, we shall continue to be very cynical about the examples, especially since so few of our good examples are so cheerfully followed in Europe.—Fort Wayne News-Sentinel.

PARTY GIRL RACKET IS A BIG SCANDAL

The sensational and unabridged stories which by habitual assault of the most meaningful magnificent business of city during American most advertising firms, is practically laid bare in Tiffany's statutory petition for divorce, which was filed by Mrs. Dorothy Tiffany Burden, a stockholder in the Tiffany Foundation, a stranded forward manager of whoopee-girl methods of entertaining which consists in the Johnny Hyde Theatre, May 23-27.

The chemical element of which these said "party girls" are chiefly made buyers drunk for the purpose of selling them large orders of goods when they are sobered. Otherwise liquor is know what they are doing. It is now revealed for the first time.

Wherever shown, "Party Girl" has been proven a complete check up at the box office and a complete knock out for all hokum.

It is only an expert accountant shows how they have made a fortune out of the standingly purchases and refusing to buy. Adolphe Menjou, Fay Wray and Cary Grant are starred in the all-talking, all-singing, all-dancing production.

SPECIAL ELECTION MONDAY AT BOYNE

Three New Members Chosen to Succeed Members Recalled

Electors of Boyne City elected A. M. Chipman, F. J. Heals and F. E. Newville members of the Board of Education to succeed the three members who resigned, at the special election held Monday and resulted in the defeat of the three recalled members who were elected at the election on April 7.

Boyne City at a fourth of different propositions in the recall proposition has been a matter of much interest, still it and no doubt will continue out of harmony for some considerable period.

Nearest of duty on the part of these members of the previous board was charged, passed on by the courts and from the result of the election now known to a majority of the electors who participated and used their right of franchise at the special election.

Talk of a shortage in the School Board funds, which were exposed, but a complete check up of the books failed to an expert accountant shows that there have been no shortages and refutes the theory that a shortage existed. Above the votes were cast at the Special Election and three favored the newly elected members, while only one favored the recalled members. However the defeated candidates as a whole received strong support such as made the election far from a one sided affair. As a result there is no small amount of acrimonious sentiment prevailing and that will continue on side like factions, all making for unpleasant neighborhood complications.

"NOT SO DUMB" A RIOT OF LAUGHS

King Vidor seems to be about the ideal directorial agency for Marion Davies.

In "Not So Dumb," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's new starring vehicle for the comedienne, which opens May 24-25 at the Palace Theatre, Vidor has provided her with the most vivacious role she has played, a sparkling vehicle that affords her wide latitude for her rare comedy talents.

The picture is an adaptation of the well-known stage farce, "Daisy" by George S. Kaufman and Marc Connelly. It is Vidor's third picture with Miss Davies as the star, the previous two having been the successful "The Patsy" and "Show People."

Miss Davies demonstrates her versatile as well as physical versatility in "Not So Dumb," playing a variety of roles as well as her personality to the role of a blundering flapper who tries to pry her family's business affairs and almost ruins her romance as well as his bank account.

Elliott Nugent plays opposite the star and the supporting cast includes Raymond Hackett, William Haines, John Fays, Sally Starr, Donald Ogden Stewart, Franklin Pangborn and George Davis. All of the players give all each and all considerably to the convincing manner in which the riotous play is presented.

MOTHERS' PILGRIMAGE MAKES 1930 MEMORIAL DAY UNIQUE

Memorial Day this year will be unique in the history of that day of solemn remembrance. For the first time in history a group of American women will visit and decorate the graves of American heroes who sleep in foreign soil. They are the Gold Star Mothers whom our government is taking on a pilgrimage to the battlefields and our cemeteries in Europe and, although their visits will extend over several months, many of them will visit the graves of their sons on Memorial Day.

In this issue of The Sentinel appears an illustrated feature article which tells about the event which gives Memorial Day this year a special significance. Read "A Pilgrimage of Gold Star Mothers," by Elsie Scott Watson in this issue.

SHEEP MEETINGS THE NEXT EVENT

All sheep owners and prospective purchasers are not only invited but strongly urged to attend a series of meetings to be held on Monday, May 26th.

Mr. Delmar LaVoi, Extension Specialist of Michigan State College, will be present, and the main speaker of the following two meetings.

Monday forenoon, May 26th, at 10 o'clock, fast time, at farm of Wilbur Spidle, East Jordan, located about one mile north of Rock Elm Grange Hall.

Monday afternoon, May 26th, at 2:30 o'clock fast time, at farm of Ed. O'Brien, Charlevoix, located about one mile south of pavement on Barnard Road.

AUTOMOBILE IN COLLISION

THREE HURT, ONE CAR WRECKED SATURDAY NIGHT

A large Sedan, driven by out of town parties rammed into a machine at the intersection of State Street and Garfield Avenue late Saturday night, with force enough to do considerable damage to the lighter machine and injuring three of its occupants, Joseph Arsille, Jean Kassen and his fifteen year old sister, Edna. Young Arsille was taken to the Physicians for treatment, where he regained consciousness almost two hours later. His injuries did not appear specially serious and the in juries to each of the other parties were of a minor nature.

The driver of the large machine made a speedy get away, without waiting to ascertain the amount of damage done and apparently without thought as to whether any one injured was either hurt or killed outright.

Later the owner of the offending car came to Charlevoix voluntarily and settled with the owners of the damages due to the accident in a manner satisfactory to all interested parties.

On LA-LA GIRLS FROM GAY PAREE IN JOY PICTURE

French pulchritude, daring and spice right from the Folies-Bergeres in Paris from a background for some of the most highly dramatic scenes of Leatrice Joy's latest picture, "A Most Immoral Lady," coming to the Palace Theatre May 27-28.

The Parisian "Hi" comes in the form of a chorus of thirty beautiful French girls, real high-kickers from the Folies-Bergeres, who are shown off not only by daring costumes but through the use of some remarkable camera angles.

The scene represents the Muscette Cafe of Paris, one of the many notorious haunts seen in Fifi Dorsay, Lola's lavish production of the sensational stage play by Townsend Martin.

Other beautiful backgrounds, filled with the color of modern society life, include New York City's plaza places and Palm Beach. Walter Pidgeon plays opposite Miss Joy in "A Most Immoral Lady," and Stanley Blackmer, Murnau Lavis, Josef phine Dunn, Robert Edeson, Donald Reed, Florence Oakley and Wilson Benge are importantly cast.

Ins and Outs of It

Julia Peterkin, the novelist, at a luncheon in New York was talking about husbands.

"The best husbands, to my mind," she said, "are those who make comparisons of their wives with those of the other kind. The husband, I say, who says that his wife is more beautiful than the kind who never take their wives out."

"The husband," Mrs. Peterkin concluded, "is no good unless his wife and stenographer think he is."

Bruce Attack Disputed

Local admirers of Robert the Bruce are aroused over the recent attacks on the Scotch hero made by Thomas Armstrong, schoolmaster of Stockport, leaving an address at Greenock. Armstrong declared that Bruce was a feudal lord and the slave of Edward the First, who "used his dominion over Scotland to exact money and soldiers from the poor, laboring people of Scotland." A Pilgrimage of Gold Star Mothers

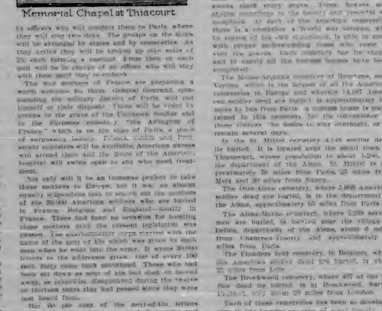
Gold Star Mothers at Tomb of Unknown Soldier

Memorial Chapel at Suresnes

Cemetery at Romagne
Romagne, France



Memorial Chapel at Thiacourt

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

MEMORIAL day this year will be unique in the history of that day. Here in America it will be observed in the manner familiar to all of us. But over across the Atlantic groups of American women will visit the plains where "grind the cruses, rob on rise" and there pay reverent tribute to America's soldier dead who sleep in foreign soil. But this tribute will not be just a formal gesture by a group. To each one of these women it will be an intensely personal act of devotion. For these women are America's Gold Star Mothers, and with loving hands they will lay flowers upon the graves of their sons.

So Memorial day this year will be unique because of the pilgrimage of Gold Star Mothers which has been arranged by the United States government. The idea of this pilgrimage dates from March 9, 1929, when congress passed a bill authorizing an appropriation of more than $1,000,000 to cover the expense of taking the mothers and wives of the service men who met their death in the World war, as the guests of the government for a visit to the place where they will either dead are buried. The War Department was then directed to make the necessary preparations for the visits and instructions were sent out to 11,000 of these women, of the number 5,000 have accepted and they will be taken at various times this summer. The remaining 6,000 have been listed and may make the trip at convenient times between now and October, 1933.

The trip will be under the direction of the War Department with the quartermaster corps in direct charge. Every detail will be handled by army officers. The quartermaster corps has developed the American cemeteries in France and is responsible for their administration. The graves of service men who died overseas and whose bodies are being shipped home to the relatives of the dead are in the custody of the Graves Registration service, which is also responsible for the identification of the World War dead. Members who make the trip will be the guests of the government from the time they land in France until they return to the United States.

Paris will be the starting point for the pilgrimage and after a visit there the mothers will be taken to the cemeteries where their sons are buried. Each mother will be assigned a special escort, a woman who served overseas during the war as a member of the army, navy or marine corps. Each mother will be given a private room in the hotels at which they stop and will be waited on by a maid. Special dining rooms will be provided for them in the hotels and restaurants.

The women will go to New York, whence all sailings will be made, arriving the day before sailing. They will go in groups of 250, sailing once a week from May to December. Their fare will be paid from their homes to New York, but they must provide in New York without charge to them by the government. The War Department has been directed to make the necessary preparations for the visits and instructions were sent out to 11,000 of these women, of the number 5,000 have accepted and they will be taken at various times this summer. The remaining 6,000 have been listed and may make the trip at convenient times between now and October, 1933.

Each mother will be given a private room in the hotels at which they stop and will be waited on by a maid. Special dining rooms will be provided for them in the hotels and restaurants.

They have figured on $600 per person for each of the women who are going and for the one relative who has already visited the grave of her son or husband and so this pilgrimage. Its purpose is to make these women who suffered by reflection that as guests of the government.

Besides the actual expense of transportation and care of the mothers, which adds up to this vast sum, there will be the salaries of all officers down in New York and Paris. The mothers will be looked after by army officers from the moment their arrive in New York until they are put on board the ships in New York ready after their return from France.

Every mother who is to go has received an engraved card inviting her, in the name of the United States government, to go on the pilgrimage. So far only about 500 have failed to write letters of gratitude to this. Inquiries in pending which should reveal those in the service of our country who had married again and so became ineligible for the trip. The number of widows who will make the trip is small.

As the sailings were arranged, letters having been mailed the quartermaster corps went further in its search for the relatives of those whose next of kin did not respond. It operated through the veterans' bureau, Red Cross, insurance and compensation, that agency has been in touch with most of them. Yet there has been hardly one mother or widow to about three men buried abroad—15,000 out of 26,000.

The oldest of the mothers who will make the trip is 86.

Many country people are home and at every stage of the pilgrimage the mothers will be met by committees representing the state in the Union. Iowa has the honor of being the first state to welcome the pilgrims, as their train will be routed through Iowa on its way to New York. Every effort has been made to make the journey comfortable and pleasant for the mothers.

Here is a list, in the order in which they cross the ocean, of the number of women from each state who will go over this summer: New York, 500; Florida, 20; Indiana, 0; Kentucky, 50; Ohio, 300; Arkansas, 47; Iowa, 131; Montana, 20; Puerto Rico, 1; Oklahoma, 88; Mount Hubert, 51; Washington, 127; California, 500; Rhode Island, 40; District of Columbia, 20; North Dakota, 50; Michigan, 245; Wisconsin, 175; Maryland, 60; New York, 742; Massachusetts, 310; Hawaii, 11; Nevada, 4; Wyoming, 13; Virginia, 60; New Mexico, 7; Oregon, 30; Mississippi, 101; Illinois, 250; Idaho, 20; Minnesota, 102; Texas, 185; North Carolina, 225; Utah, 31; New Jersey, 320; Pennsylvania, 467; West Virginia, 42; Georgia, 83; Louisiana, 40; Missouri, 151; Vermont, 20; Tennessee, 51; Kansas, 100; Louisiana, 115; Colorado, 74; Alabama, 65; Arizona, 15; Maine, 58; South Carolina, 40; New Hampshire, 27; Delaware 31.

There now eight cemeteries in Europe where the Gold Star Mothers will visit, one is in England, one in Belgium, and six are in France. All eight of these cemeteries are open to the public. Well kept and tended walks, which were planned from the standpoint of symmetry and art, wind their way through each of them. Stately trees possess much every grace. These, and the artistic monuments to the heroic dead resemble parks. Each of the American cemeteries there is a caretaker, a World war veteran, who by reason of his own sacrifices, is able to sympathize with proper understanding those who come to visit the graves. Each cemetery has the means and is ready to receive visitors as he been completed.

The Meuse-Argonne cemetery at Romagne, near Verdun, which is the largest of all the American cemeteries in Europe and where 14,000 American soldier dead are buried is approximately 150 miles by bus from Paris. A motor coach is available in this cemetery, for the convenience of those visitors who desire to stay overnight, or to remain several days.

In the St. Mihiel cemetery 4,148 soldier dead are buried. It is located near the small town of Thiaucourt, whose population is about 1,500, in the department of the Aisne. St. Mihiel is approximately 70 miles from Paris and 30 miles from Metz and 20 miles from Nancy.

The Oise-Aisne cemetery, where 2,068 American soldier dead are buried, is in the department of the Aisne, approximately 60 miles from Paris.

The Aisne-Marne cemetery, where 2,265 service men are buried, is located near the village of Belleau, department of the Aisne, about 4 miles from Chateau-Thierry and approximately 60 miles from Paris.

The Flanders field cemetery, in Belgium, where 368 American soldier dead are buried, is about 20 miles from Lille.

The Brookwood cemetery, where 477 of the soldier dead are buried is in Brookwood, Surrey, England, and about 29 miles from London.

Each of these cemeteries has been so developed that it has become an example of actual beauty, and is so cared for as to constitute a contributing ground of the country's attractions. The services of those who in varied times, handsome gardeners which have replaced the temporary wire of wood, many feet years of loneliness are spent the time for the soldier of Christian faith and the shield of David for those of Jewish faith.

On each headstone is inscribed the soldier's name and rank. The organization in which he served, the date of his death and the state from which he came. The inscription on the graves of the unknown soldiers is "Here rests in honored glory an American soldier known but to God."

Because the officers of the ceremonial division of the quartermaster generals office have been unceasingly on the alertness there that may sound the identity of the unknown soldier, particularly the possibility of the "unknowns" will have been identified. The committee division seems to reconsidered, and the number will be reduced to one or two.

Arrangements are in hand to make this pilgrimage as easily being made. In this country fifty receptions were made and of that number four-page were beautiful white lilies of the "Easter Lilonia" graces were identified. In the last six months there have been seven receptions and four identifications showing that the work of looking after the World war dead has not ended.

Another work in connection with the reception that is progressing is the completion of the chapels being established in each cemetery. The American Battle Monuments commission announces that the chapels in Flanders Field cemetery and Brookwood cemetery will be finished by the end of the year 1932. The chapel at Romagne will be completed in another year, and those in the St. Mihiel cemetery and Meuse-Argonne cemetery will be completed by May, 1932. In each chapel are inscribed the names of the men who are buried in its respective cemeteries.

Legume Silage Is Dairy Farm Help

Sweet Clover May Prove Valuable as Winter Ration for Cows.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Sweet clover silage may prove valuable as a winter ration for dry cows and heifers under dryland conditions where corn and other feed crops fail, says the federal bureau of dairy industry. Sweet clover can be placed in an inexpensive silo, such as a trench, and can provide the principal feed for the dry stock through the winter. This is indicated by tests at the United States Department of Agriculture field station at Ardmore, South Dakota.

Prefer Corn Silage.

Corn however, did not refish the sweet clover silage as they did corn silage or grain silage. In a feeding experiment in which cows were fed sweet clover silage without a grain or hay ration, production dropped greatly. A sweet clover crop usually produces considerable vegetation even in years when drought cuts the corn crop, but in the vicinity of Ardmore many cows refuse to graze the sweet clover because of a bitter taste that is more noticeable in that variety than in other field stations of the department. Experience with sweet clover silage at Ardmore showed that smelling causes the bitterness to disappear.

Molasses Added.

At the Hunter, Mont., station, cows preferred corn silage to alfalfa silage mixed by adding 1 part of beet-sugar molasses to 20 parts of first cutting alfalfa.

"An interesting feature of the labor-saving feature," says J. B. Dawson of the bureau of dairy industry, "was the inability of the animals, when receiving silage as the only feed, to maintain an appetite for large quantities. Many of the cows consumed large quantities for a few days, but invariably the consumption decreased after a short time."

New Type of Asphaltic Coating for the Silo

Asphalt is one of the best coatings for stopping leaks in silos and water tanks, but this has been handicapped by the fact that the walls must be dry and fairly warm if the asphalt is to make a good bond. There is now on the market an asphalt coating which can be applied to a wet surface, so that the silo can be emptied on the inside a few days or a time as the silo is filled. Apparently, the bond is just as strong as with the ordinary asphalt applied to a dry surface. This property of allowing objects to a damp surface is also important in stopping leaks in tanks and cisterns, as is the fact that this type of asphalt does not make the water taste or smell.

Beetles Are Greatest Enemies of Cucumber

The striped cucumber beetle and the spotted cucumber beetle are the greatest insect enemies to the cucumber. If only a few plants are infested by the pests, make short frames and cover with cheesecloth to protect the plants from the beetles. A solution made by stirring a teaspoonful of lard and a small quantity of turpentine mixture will repel attacks from the beetle and prevent injury to the foliage.

Protecting the plants from the cows can also be accomplished by fencing them in. If wire enclosures are not handy, stakes and chicken netting will serve the purpose.

Fertile Soil Needed

Any vegetable crops require a fertile soil. For all around purposes there is no substitute for farmyard manure as a fertilizer. It should be well decomposed and not too coarse. Fine grass and other undesirable material in the soil interferes with the preparation of the seedbed and the cultural operations. Manure should be applied to the soil in time to allow it to decompose to some extent before the seed is sown.

Agricultural Hints

Tuberculosis-free cows can cover be promotive free stock.

Good alsike can be made without timothy if it is the silo.

Don't put fresh feed into dirty or sour troughs.

Cool, moist storage is best for beets, carrots, cabbage, turnips, parsnips, winter radishes and celery.

When transplanting do not let the roots of plants be open to the hot sun or to the drying influence of the wind.

It costs on the average 48 cents to sell a truck load of produce at a market, but from 6 to 12 cents to get it there.

Removing a crop of alfalfa late in the season will make the plants more susceptible to winter injury and may cause the destruction of the stand.

Seed potatoes that were not treated last fall before storage should be given a treatment before planting. Large losses from Rhizoctonia are suffered last year because many growers failed to dip the seed.

For lightning protection it is well to ground to earth every electric appliance to any form building on the outside even though the system is connected to a water pipe on the inside.

The lumber crop last year showed an increase of about one per cent over the year before. The most of this increase was in the western states where the greater part of the stock is cut on the market as usual.

Happy Movie Endings Popular With Edison

The great inventor, Thomas A. Edison, has been called upon known by most Americans, but those who might know him owing to his interest in the movies or not. He is under a movie fan and especially partial to westerns.

"If there is any question to settle at the end of the picture, how the hero and heroine are going to live happily forever after Mr. Edison is highly interested and no more than one occasion has written instructions and requested an answer to anything on such a story.

"We are all standing for human happiness," remarked Mr. Edison after a recent disappointing picture "and while we must not succeed to real life, we can extract some enjoyment happy in pictures."

Happy Woman Tells How She Lost 19 Pounds of Fat in 27 Days
During October a woman in Minneapolis wrote—"By first bottle of Kruschen Salts lasted almost 4 weeks and during that time I lost 19 pounds of fat—Kruschen is all you claim it to be. I never felt better. I have for years."
Here's the secret that banishes fat and brings into thousands and thousands of attractiveness that makes slender people envy.
Every morning take one half teaspoonful of Kruschen Salts in a glass of hot water—before breakfast.
Be sure and get this every morning for 27 days. The first bottle does the trick or the Kruschen Salts health man will cheerfully refund your money.
Kruschen Salts contains six separate mineral salts which are necessary to every portion of glandular waste in the human body. Each of these salts is separated from the pure, fresh blood containing Kruschen Salts. Then they are carried out of the body, one by one, each day. Each of the body now then is followed by Nature's help—a constant supply of vital health and charming beauty—a bright eye, clear skin, cheerful vivacity and charming figure.
Here's the secret: Fill with stomach with one bottle of Kruschen Salts from any drug store anywhere in America with the distinct understanding that you must be satisfied with results or money back.

IS DEMOCRACY TOTTERING?

Has militarism become the great American menace?

President Hoover, when Secretary of Commerce, and that man who sees more than 200 Federal bureaus, boards and commissions which are empowered to make rules and regulations which have the effect of law.

This trend is increasing and no matter how much we talk of individualism and democracy we are headed straight toward paternalism. "We citizens but like to do with regulating his business and means after the style that suits us best. We are all subject to the whims of a spreading bureaucracy.

For many years we profess passable, yet sheer political ignorance in seeking dictatorial powers. The invisible control by a group of trained minds and sometimes even of an oligarchy.

In the past quarter-century we called constitutional rights that have been abrogated on a specious plea. Even freedom of speech is threatened.

American industry has been swelled by politicians and private interests have been held before public audiences bodies and treated with distaste and contempt. Offenders has been investigated.

Will the people let democracy fail?

TRAINING CAMPS BACK BONE OF DEFENSE

Now that summer is past around the corner, the interest of many of our people is increased by our Military Training Camps which annually offer instruction to thousands of young men. According to Major Owen R. Meredith, Chief of the R O T C corps of the University of Kentucky our training corps for reserve officers is the very foundation of our national defense and for that reason it is almost constantly undermined attack from the pacifists and those who for whatever motives do not believe in national defense. In an interesting article on "Uncle Sam's Reserve Officers" in the current number of the National Republic, Major Meredith says:

"The army of the United States is composed of the Regular Army, the National Guard and the Organized Reserves.

The Regular Army is intended as a small, highly trained body of professional officers and enlisted men. Its strength is in respect to the population of the United States is relatively that of police forces to the communities they serve. Two of the major functions of the regular army are to provide instructors for other contingents, and to constitute a first line of defense by a nucleus around which can be organized and developed the full strength of all components in case of a major emergency. Minor emergencies are to be handled without calling upon these organizations at all, and may be in garrisons our outlying possessions these formations, the Regular Army and provides the planning body, board of directors so to speak, for possible contingencies. It will be noted that this condition meets not traditional objection to a large standing army of professional soldiers. One of the most important matters involved is that of supplies and equipment. The World War brought forcibly to the front the fact that large bodies of troops can be assembled and organized faster than they can be supplied and equipped and, the enormous costs and wastes connected with almost prohibitive and precaution for services with which to train the people. In war, time is an all important factor. A few men well organized, trained and equipped are more effective than many times their number after the crisis has arisen. Hence the necessity of preparation and a well thought out plan.

"The National Guard is a unity of the arms soldiering is an incident to their civil occupations. They are organized, trained and equipped according to the Regular Army. So far as federal use is concerned, the guard is intended to join with the Regular Army in compression where the latter forces are not expected to be adequate. In addition, the National Guard is a wonderful organization and in democratic municipal home communities. A fine support in times of disaster.

"Both the National Guard and Regular Army will perform, and have performed, many public services not every remotely connected with war. They are organized and trained to perform these public services, and are frequently found a source of disaster, rendering aid and comfort along strictly humanitarian lines.

"The Organized Reserves consists of the best possible for major contingencies. They are skeleton organizations into which would be filled those of trained men between active service and forgive who the training of officers and enlisted men. It is the backbone of military service in the defense of the United States. Incidentally, methods of police forces to the communities they serve. NATIONAL AFFAIRS
Frank P. Lockney

One of the most difficult hurdles for the internationalists to make in their efforts to induce the United States to take a more active part in international affairs by joining the League of Nations or some of the other agencies designed to embroil the United States in the affairs of Europe, or to erect a super-government to meddle with our internal politics, is the advice on foreign affairs given in President Washington's affairs given in President Washington's farewell address to the people of the United States. And this advice, it is to be remembered, was supported by the sagest in views of the other founders of the nation and the early patriots.

All sorts of arguments are used to get around the advice of George Washington. The most common excuse of the internationalists is that times have changed since the day of George Washington, that we are no longer weak, but a rich and powerful nation. This is undoubtedly true, but it is to be remembered that other nations have grown strong, too, and our strength and resources are only an additional temptation to involve us in those political affairs of the world which are war in all sections of cars. Another argument, and one which is even thinner, is that the development of the radio, the telegraph, the fast steamship and the radio have changed human history to such an extent that joint our and racial antipathies have gone out of date, or are rapidly being eliminated, and that we can therefore join a "super-government" with perfect safety and satisfaction to ourselves.

This of course is absurd. The nations of Europe are today as antagonistic as ever before. This is even true of continental Russia where the people are full up with stories of how the capitalistic nations are about to destroy them, and are taught that the Americans must something worse than the Russians. The nations of Europe have been fighting for 1,000 years or more, and the invention of the telegraph and the steamship have not changed conditions. They have only made the nations nations more efficient and therefore able to fight not only with arms of war but with that more insidious weapon, propaganda.

Therefore with nations more accessible than they were a century or two ago and with the propaganda machines in the different countries working with an efficiency little dreamed of a generation ago, and all designed to break down the nationalist policies of the United States, Americans have more cause than ever to take seriously the farewell address of George Washington. As a correspondent in the New York Herald-Tribune said recently:

"The need for heeding Washington's advice against political entanglement abroad is much greater today than in his time. Wires with all the modern incentives for propaganda for "framing" a situation and suddenly stampeding whole populations, then involving them quickly by means of a lot of international automatic self-starting political machinery, never before has it been so clearly to our interests to stand clear, independent and neutral, reserving to ourselves our disinterested and unentangled political judgment at moments of great crises."

The thinking American will not be deceived, therefore, by the assertion that modern invention and modern developments have made the advice of George Washington archaic. They will see that the danger of a super-government to regulate American affairs is more acute than in the days when the only trans-Atlantic communication was the sailing vessel. They do comprehend the situation and for that reason they are against any commitments or any joining of super-organizations which will take from the President and the Senate of our own country, any of their power in formulate and direct the international policies of the United States.

RATE OF TREE GROWTH

Studies made in the northern hardwood region by officers of the Forest Service, U. S. Department of Agriculture, indicate that the greatest timber growth increment occurs in partially cut stands. In virgin forests the loss from windfall and mortality practically offsets the growth. In cut over areas which are restocking the estimated growth is at the rate of 35 to 65 board feet per acre per year but this growth does not become available until the stand reaches an age of from 80 to 100 years. Selective cutting—that is, taking only the largest trees—accelerated the growth on the remaining trees and the growth ranges from 110 to 195 board feet depending on the number and size of the remaining trees

COPPER AND THE TARIFF

Production and consumption of copper are almost perfectly equalized in the United States. When foreign mines can produce copper and lay it down in our market for about six cents a pound, a tariff against domestic and foreign production costs seems essential if the industry is to continue to progress and pay fair dividends, high wages to thousands of workers, and a large share of the taxes of many western states.

In 1929, the United States produced 1,015,000 tons of copper and consumed approximately 1,078,000 tons, a nice balance. But we imported 487,185 tons from countries whose production costs are very low because of cheap labor which lives under conditions that would not be tolerated in the United States.

High wages and living standards for all workers have become integral parts of our modern industrial structure. Such conditions cannot be maintained if home industries are unable to profitably sell their output because of insufficient protection from foreign competition.

EXHAUSTING OIL RESOURCES

The supremacy of the United States in oil production may be laid to four causes. First is the magnificent supply of petroleum resources. Second, petroleum in this country is generally readily accessible and may be quickly and easily transported. Third, American ingenuity and enterprise have discovered the oil, built great pipe line systems and refineries and created a tremendous demand. Fourth, American oil production has been relatively free of bureaucratic governmental interference.

During 1929, we produced 65 per cent of the world's total supply of petroleum. Russia the second largest producer, was responsible for but 13 per cent. As the Federal Oil Conservation Board was said, "This country is depleting its supply several times faster than the rest of the world."

Opinions differ as to just how long our oil resources may be expected to last. But it is generally agreed that petroleum waste, due to over-production, constitutes an economic crime. For many years demand has been appreciably below supply. Irresponsible producers, whose aim is to produce as much oil as possible irrespective of market conditions, have made the efforts of the major operators to effect intelligent conservation futile.

Even if our oil reserves were in exhaustible, waste of a product which is absolutely necessary to modern civilization would be inexcusable.

A DUBIOUS SUPPOSITION

Advocates of the proposed law to forbid interstate shipment of small arms are basing their case on a very dubious supposition—that once a law is passed, its enforcement, immediately follows.

It is far more logical to believe that the law would turn upon itself and become a menace. The law-abiding citizen would no longer be able to buy a gun while one ship could smuggle in enough revolvers and pistols to supply all the criminals in the United States for years. The American underworld is wonderfully organized. Its connections are far-reaching. No law could disarm its members.

To make it a felony for a person with a criminal record to possess a revolver or pistol, and increase the penalty for a crime committed by a person with a gun in his possession, whether he used it or not, would do far more to discourage the use of weapons by criminals than any legislation designed to prevent sale or shipment.

AHEAD OF THE TIMES

Telephone service, both national and international, is constantly being improved. During the past five years the average time required to complete a long distance connection has been cut from 7.5 minutes to 2.4 minutes. Errors in completing calls have been reduced to the point where they are practically non-existent.

The telephone industry is not only keeping up with the times but is always in advance.

"Mortals and Immortals" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Christian Science Churches on May 18.

Among the citations which form the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "Be not thou therefore ashamed of the testimony of our Lord, nor of me his prisoner; but be thou partaker of the afflictions of the gospel according to the power of God." (II Tim. 1:8).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy: "The normal type and manner are models of spiritual sense drawn by prophet and Apostle, and the highest comprehension of loveliness when God send all material." (p. 247).

CHURCH OF GOD
Rev. I. T. Mark, Pastor

Preaching Service at 11 o'clock. Sunday School at 10 o'clock.

Prayer Meeting every Wednesday evening at 7:30. Brother Hewy will preach next Sunday evening.

Young People's Society will meet with Mrs. Arthur Guild on Thursday at 2:30 o'clock.

On Friday evening the young people are all invited to the home of Mrs. Wm. Palmer for their business and social meeting.

We have closed the most successful revival meeting that has ever been held here. Rev. A. J. Hilgrell the evangelist from Michigan City, Indiana, returned to his home Sunday night to remain there a few days and then begin another revival in Louisiana next month.

It is estimated that about three hundred people took the services and lectures while he was in Charlevoix. His unique methods of preaching and also of presenting the Gospel to the vision by beautiful hand-painted pictures prove very, effective and as a result of these efforts almost 35 people took a stand for the Lord publicly and a number expect to be baptized the first Sunday in June. We extend a cordial invitation to all to attend our regular services.

Motive for Murder Remains Mystery

Indiana.—With the unfinished silver strands under great pallor are still awaiting to surrender a web of mystery that shrouds the death of Mrs. Ora Jones, fourteen-year-old bride of Reginald Jones.

William Nolliens, stepsons, has confessed that he strangled the young woman in her home leaving a note to that effect on her body.

"This is my first work, but you take note on me. It may be a lesson to you not to trust any other man this way. You got this woman to plan the most perfect murder she could plan on a mask. Now see what you have done."

The letters although answering the action still maintains silence as to the motive for the crime. Police say he refuses to respond to the most subtle inquiries. The police department is also said to be convinced that the letter was arranged in answering the James house last fall, just after Mrs. Jones's first husband died. Just in the mail received a key to the front door, presumably from the boy friend, and this was.

Mrs. Jones discovered the note and when he returned home the young wife set to her bedroom with its key and locked herself in. She emerged from a window early August fainted and fell unconscious.

Neighbors said of having seen an elderly man enter the Jones home soon after the husband had left it in the morning. The conference was fact that the name visited in the Hendrickson Hotel Nellens, one of the persons who had been suspected of the crime. Papers arrested Nellens a week ago, in his rooming house, and found identification on his clothes.

Mrs. Jones was well known in Indiana's colored society set, being the daughter of Edward Nelson, secretary-treasurer of the Nelsons Insurance Co. Before her marriage to Jones she was employed in the office of the Indiana Republican committee.

Hinterford, Maine.—Victim of one of the most peculiar accidents ever reported to local authorities, George Thomas, foreign-born, of Westchester Manor, has lost his left hand as the result of a fight between the town of Wells with Andrew Reed, Westchester, and Eric McCullough, of Wells. Thomas lost his arm and his dream knife was cut.

The three were near the post office at about 10 o'clock on the town of Wells, when they met a large crowd. Soon after the spectators passed each other. Thomas' left arm fell to the ground. They turned to the crowd and after having turned around to look for his arm he was gone, while blood was pouring from the severed wrist and shoulder. The arm had been severed as cleanly as though sheared off with a knife, say state police officials.

Daddy Still Pondering About Buying That Baby

This little tale was quite young, as may be seen from its true story. Neighbor friends had a new baby to which she was keenly interested. She ran in to see it as often as she could and she kept telling the fond parents that she wanted one, too.

One day she came home in a state of high excitement.

"Mamma," she called, "have you got a dollar?"

"No, my dear," her mother said, "I haven't got a dollar. What do you want a dollar for?"

But the child would not tell, as the girls she kept insisting that she wanted a dollar very badly.

"Then you'll have to ask your daddy," said her mother.

But daddy insisted on knowing all about it and finally the story came out.

"I told 'em," said the child breathlessly, "that I wanted a little baby, just like theirs and they told me there was a place up street where I could get one for a dollar down and a dollar a week. Now come along with me quick, daddy, as he's got ours. And you know it's just wonderful. If you pay your dollar down and then don't pay your dollar a week they won't take your baby away from you but make they're glad to get rid of it."

Daddy is now trying to think of a good comeback for his neighbor friends.—Springfield Republican.

She did not like me much; almost she seemed to shiver a little, as if with cold. I leaned out, looked round, and saw that my friend Bassett was there. He was walking toward us across the marshy grass; had reached us; was looking at me; was speaking.

"Monty," he said. "I'm sorry to say I have orders to arrest you for the alleged murder of Sir Edward Fanshawe."

I turned not to him, but to Ida. In an instant I understood all. She, the mysterious rider, the stealthy lover, had dared one more risk. She had ordered me into doing that which could, thereafter, I would have denied. I had been deceived, and I had been used as the cat's paw between the shadows of reins and steel. The words were said; there was no unsaying them. Ida was married to an accused murderer.

"Anything you say," warned Bassett, "may be used in evidence against you."

I paid no more attention to him than to the roar of the sea behind me. I knew not yet whether Ida had meant to be a party to my ruin, or whether, by inciting me to the open, she thought I had fired the shot. She looked back at me, and her face did not fall before mine. She only said, "It's no answer to you," she said. "I know about everything."

Little Practical Joke Broke Old Friendship

Brown and White rabbits of course are not their right names; not only were each neighbors, but they worked in the same office and were known in the district, by Squinting Brown, to whom Squinting White was a rival, he would have to move immediately for Chicago to resume a duel.

"I'll be back," he said as he left for the train, "and when I get back I'll certainly buy a couple of swans for the wife to row on the pond. I'll be back in ten days."

Ten days went by, and then two weeks, and a month, and still Brown was not back. Then a letter arrived from Chicago, and Squinting White read it with a puzzled look on his face.

"Brown's not coming back," he said. "He says he's married a girl he met in Chicago and is going to live there. Now I wonder what's the matter with him?"

Then he read the letter again, and suddenly he began to laugh. "Why, it's a practical joke!" he said. "Brown's not married at all. He's just pulling my leg. Well, I'll be even with him when he comes back."

Brown came back in a month, and Squinting White was ready for him. He had bought a pair of swans, and he had them sent down to Brown's house. Then he went to the station to meet his friend.

"Hullo, Brown," he said, "I've got a pair of swans for the pond. Where's your wife?"

"Wife?" said Brown. "I haven't got a wife. I'm not married."

"Not married?" said Squinting White. "Why, I've had a letter from you saying you were married, and that you were coming back with your wife."

"I've had no letter," said Brown. "I've been in Chicago all the time, and I've had no letter from you."

Then Squinting White knew that he had been the victim of a practical joke, and he knew quite a lot about the Brown household, including the fact that Mrs. Brown did not shine particularly at preparing meals. So, in order to get even with Brown, he bought two cook books, sent them to Mrs. Brown and intimated that her husband had purchased them and would like her to study them.

When Brown returned home there was a little scene, like a fruit that Frank have premeditately touched. She was sick, almost nearly, before her; nearly with the self-easterly laughs the well-bred girls, as retired and languages are taught her; she strive to not settle the "Starlings, tone, Ilanta, equals, that ravaged her heart, and, in turn, deranged color, and about a bright time throughout our little hour. We may have been the better for our previous I cannot say; I only know that they were used to keep up.

"Ida's parents, I know, maintained a studious siege of me; Mrs. Lacelle and even visited Port Moresby, more or less frequently, but practically none of her friends, for her husband's sake, would have anything to do with her. Nothing of the kind, when it meant so little? Well might this stick close to me who was down on the top that was to be saying upon occasion, they only were to the gold of Hannah's."

"I'm sorry," she said. "It was in no possible way I could help it. I'm sorry you, all the time, and it—it—"

"Well, you must have known," I said. "I was convicted to five years."

"I am quite certain that Monty is a good man and true at Port Moresby convicted a sentence in order to save my neck; and I am equally sure that the Judge and the crown prosecutor—some of whom were friends of mine—knew no longer while the other, the officials could pronounce the sentence—were most before placed with the verdict that they would not easily have admitted.

So I was sent to Kalu Jail and there was no reason to hope my sentence would be remitted after all. And I, prisoner of a dozen white men, refused to go to Tanatana and do the work that was necessary to hold the colony for me.

They did not remember me make it, and for me to join their ranks for it would, surely, since my last rebellion hardly see them, and the head before with his sharp little eyes, and the mouth that was a mere gash, and the nose that could see the little off a delinquent native punishment—with two days without water, a dozen lashes, and being driven half-mad—they wouldn't see me again. I was a dangerous man, and my evil fate, they reasoned, was the result of my own folly. Besides, I was a gentleman, and gentlemen do not rebel.

TRIMMING BECOMES IMPORTANT; PASTEL COLORS MUCH IN VOGUE

What a new classic simplicity are we paying to the hand sewing women this season. Never seen such intricate as fashioning, so infinite in weave and color, and that which is the strongest expression in their favor—an absolutely foreground.

Then, too, the styles have changed so utterly, which also invites a new interest. The fact that the sandwiching princess lines are so obligatory to the fashioning of simple daytime frocks should prove highly inspiring to the home dressmaker who is casting about for ideas to make' suggestions. One can readily see from the lines in the picture how very charming the princess silhouette does when fashioned in the simplest manner. There is nothing complicated or bizarre or abstruse in the making of this frock.

Those sweet girls of olden wistful days of the nineteen hundreds had their own peculiar manner of developing the dainty effect by the use of a generous amount of pinning to bring them on the new frocks, no doubt because it provided a socially correct excuse for the feminine confidences a parlor friend always had to whisper in the ear of her friend as she stood before the mirror. Frank are reported to supplement pinning with basting, and sometimes even on the trimming, but this cannot be considered as the usual method, for after the fashion is well in vogue it is unnecessary.

Pastel Colors in Vogue.

One really cannot go through the shops and the fashionable mannequin displays without being impressed with the use of the new pastel colors. Many of these are extremely subtle with many tones and shades that are very alluring. The greens are especially lovely in every key from the very pale to the rich tones of a lustrous emerald of a distinctive cast. Blues, of course, are in high favor, and the pastel shades are very attractive. Yellows, ranging from the pale primrose to the deeper tones, are also very much in evidence. Pinks and corals are also very much in the picture.

Many of the frocks that come under the classification of the new pastel shades are developed in the sheerest of fabrics, and a number are so in a transparent manner. Printed chiffons are very much in evidence, and the printed designs are also very attractive. Many of the printed chiffons are developed in the new pastel shades. As the season opens the interest in the movements of the steamers on the Great Lakes and connecting waters is increased. Many of the boats have been improved and equipped with a comparatively new material, and there is added interest in the fact that they have been put in commission earlier than usual. The opening of navigation is also watched with greater interest because of the fact that the boats are now operated by a powerful motive power, which was not known in the early days of navigation. The earlier boats were all propelled by a powerful engine, which was not known in the early days of navigation. "Since right there, it may easily see it," I told her. "Where God was only, His eyes are hidden from my natural."

"Only, and it was well. Yesterday, at least seven in front of the wood, and there some—I mean I could, I declared she was a woman."

"Were did you see?" I was impatient for satisfaction with.

"Then was that just now—the time you went down digging. Yet from back other time. I was in the village with Sergeant Ali and Dan Daniel and Pendleton—and I mean Pendleton, not Dan. It was the middle of the afternoon, and I was sitting in the shade of the mosque, when I saw a woman coming down the hill. She was veiled, and had on a black dress, and I thought it was Pendleton's memsahib, and that she had come to visit the sick people. But I knew Pendleton's memsahib was not that size, and I was puzzled. Then I saw the woman was going to the house where Dan was living, and I thought she might be his wife, and that I ought to go and tell him. But I was busy, and I forgot all about it. Then I remembered it again, and I thought I would tell you, but you were digging, and I didn't like to interrupt you. Then I forgot it again. Then I remembered it again, and I thought I would tell you when you came home to dinner

MAKES DEMANDS FOR PORTO RICO

Governor Theodore Roosevelt of Porto Rico, issues the strongest and most insistent statement for the repeal of the section of the Island Charter as passed by Congress. The money he is drawing under the admirable law passed by Washington and Hamilton of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States is not a gift but a loan. It is for the benefit of the people of Porto Rico. It is for the most part spent in the most productive public improvements of Government, and in addition to his embarrassment in the matter of the law he is trying to live up to the pledge given through the newspapers on his national visits here and in Porto Rico. Moreover, he points out, every penny that is borrowed has been and must be spent among the natives of the Island. Moreover, he points out, every penny that is borrowed has been and must be spent among the natives of the Island.

Porto Rico is rich in natural resources and industrious people. It is the one, and practically the only, island in the Caribbean Sea that is not a source of trouble. It is the one island that is a source of profit to the United States. What is the United States going to do? Is it going to keep its pledge or is it going to break it?

THE EVER-PRESENT MENACE

Fatten.com is the great American menace. Is advertisers are always with us, offering to the people their unrealistic earmarks for the life of the world.

It is a change to democratic institutions, which are based on moderation. It becomes, in a quite hasty case of government to redefine the personal conduct of the citizen and the conduct of his business.

Governors' ownership advocates and reformers, sweeping your terrors in strongly centralized federal government, are all followers of the paternalistic school of thought. They would smother initiative and enterprise in the misery of the politician. They would restrict liberty of speech and action until the words became meaningless.

that rang over the sandy parade ground in Texas seventy-nine years ago awakened civilization. The old frontier posts that were dotted from the Red River to the Rio Grande were the harbingers of progress. Old Glory rose each morning to wave a welcome. And toward that Glory trekked hitherto with sore misgivings and few hugs.

The western frontier of Texas was ever elastic in its dimensions. Before the Civil War it extended far, during the war it drew back hundreds of miles, when reconstruction days were over it again stretched out to the west. Gradually, one by one, settlements crowded up to the boundary. But from the time that Texas went into the Union through the 70s the United States government maintained on that front of settlement military forces, the exact distant outpost of the white man, commanded by a distinguished boundary line of contention.

That so far as the front was concerned, the white man was the aggressor in the drive and southward movement of the long centuries was the consistent thing. Texas was the battleground of the Indian and the white man. Texas was the battleground of the Indian and the white man.

CARS AND WAGONS

Railroads and horses seem to be having their place as the country's largest factors for prosperity. The number of freight loads handled by rail one railroad during March was 10,000 cars more than a year ago, and 20,000 cars more than in March, 1920. Motor trucks and horses have been racing neck and neck with the railroads. Then came a slump in the big drive that is being made for rehabilitation of the railroads.

Motor trucks going out for hire and hauling cargo are the result of motor cars. The production of motor driven farm wagons in 1920 amounted to 10,847 as compared with 37,081 in 1925. The merchandise value of the motors dropped off nearly one-fourth. The drop in the manufacture of farm trucks was less than five per cent.

And now what are we to do with the automobile business?

TEXAS WAS TRAINING FIELD FOR OFFICERS

One of the amazing facts, and perhaps the most important one for American citizens in the early 20th century, is that the southwestern portion was under the Texas flag. Texas was guarded by a chain of United States forts, and of those fortresses strongholds little now remain except tradition. In an interesting story in the early Texas forts, Miss Carrie J. Crouch says in the current issue of the National Magazine under the title "Forts of Historic Glory."

The old forts and, in reveille,

THE THEATRE

MARRIAGE IS SUBJECT OF MAE MURRAY FILM

"How charmingly naive and old-fashioned of you to believe in the ideals of marriage," George Gatwell says to Mae Murray in the picture version of "Peacock Alley," the fifty-attacking production recorded by First National and showing June 2-3 at the Palace Theatre.

To warn Mae Murray in the role of a flower girl whose marriage to a banker and a projection for a wealthy, declares that "the ring is the answer and the wedding march an anesthetic—and any woman who says she doesn't is lying."

Miss Murray makes her initial debut in this new production of "Peacock Alley," which also has a new story by Garry Wilson, the stage. In "Peacock Alley" it was Mae Murray's first motion picture accompaniment and performance characteristic Murray dances in Technicolor.

Besides George Barraud, the supporting cast includes James Rolarda, Richard Tucker, Phillips Smalley, E. H. Calvert, John Bowers, W. L. Thorne and Amber Hay. Marshall has directed.

BEES MAKE MONEY FOR ORCHARDIST

In Gathering Honey They Increase Fruit Yield.

Without making a penny's worth of honey, new one seems quite likely to make large profits for their owner if the owner is also an orchardist. This was demonstrated during the past year by the pronouncement of several enthusiasts to have noticed the improvement of their fruit crops following the introduction of bees for the sole purpose of pollenizing.

One of the demonstrations was made by the W. W. Farnsworth orchard at Watervliet. The owner, who is one of the pioneer fruit growers of Berrien county, is the owner of a large number of bees, which he uses in connection with his own orchards. Recognizing the fact that bees help pollenize the fruit, and that the more bees there are the better the pollenization, Mr. Farnsworth purchased several hives of bees last spring and placed them in his orchard. The result was a bumper crop of fruit, which he says he would not have had if it had not been for the bees.

Mr. Farnsworth has had considerable experience with bees and knows how to handle them. He says that the bees do not sting unless they are irritated in some way. He has been stung but once in the last two years, and that was because he accidentally pushed his hand against a bee. Instead of stinging him the bee crawled up his arm and died.

Mr. Farnsworth has had bees in his orchard for a number of years, and says that he has found that they help pollenize the fruit. He has also found that they help to keep the trees free from insects. He says that the bees will not sting unless they are irritated in some way.

Clearing Out Brambles Quite Difficult Task

Illinois has made great headway and now 75 is members of orchard, primarily at the corner of a deep gulch, where they can be used to advantage. A good roadway runs behind them, so that the workers can, and immediately bushwhack will handle this job. For the most part, deeply rutted a place, hoping to find water in that the water proves to be too small to be of much use. Generally speaking, the best way to handle the job is to have some person on hand who can, that such brambles can be made to pay.

After the shrubs and small trees are all cut down and the ground cleared, the stumps should be removed. This is a big job, but it is necessary if the land is to be used for anything else. The stumps can be removed by means of a stump puller, which is a machine that can be rented for a small sum. Some of the stumps will be too large to be removed by the stump puller, and these will have to be blasted out with dynamite. This is a dangerous job, and should be done only by a person who is experienced in the use of dynamite.

European Gooseberries Quite Vigorous Growers

There are two groups of gooseberries, the European and the American types. The European varieties are vigorous growers and produce large attractive berries. They are no better in quality than the American varieties and are subject to mildew. Consequently, they are not recommended for commercial culture, though there may have a place in the home garden where something a little out of the ordinary is desired. Oregonia is one of the most satisfactory European varieties. Oregon Champion is a cross between the European and American types that has made many friends.

Dehorn Peach Trees

It is seldom necessary to dehorn peach trees. It is usually much better to give annual pruning. Dehorning causes a profusion of rank sprout growths below the cuts. Many of these branches cannot be used; some break off and most of them grow too rapidly to be easily trained. The crop also suffers for two years or more following dehorning.

Disease of Grapes

Black rot is a very common, serious disease of grapes and where thorough spraying is not carried out, nearly bunches are taken from them and in every year that conditions are favorable for the development of this disease. A good all-round spraying program for grapes is contained in bulletin No. 231, of the Ohio experiment station, which can be secured by writing the station direct, or it can be secured in nearly every county agricultural agent's office.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

By GRANT DIXON

Getting Service

A young New Yorker recently went to a famous mid-western hospital for a highly scientific operation, and his personal nursing was, of course, among the big things he has been hot about as a visitor case. But it seems not even the ill-fated his nurses were a pair of comely misses. He found he was the first to receive without some kind of a bouquet. He asked for something that resulted, and that's why this lad is now in the hospital minus a few bones in a leg.

Pet Cheie

Tracy Stevens, prominent in a New York social set, has been known for some time to flaunt a diamond in her bosom as a free advertising scheme. Now, at the Metropolitan Art Museum, she has been seen with a diamond in her navel. Which is going a little too far, even for Tracy.

New Game

Often since New Yorkers who have time of Gargantuan amusing and other children purchase have devised a new device of amusement. It is the game of tattoos. If you are invited to the Smiths for dinner, you simply about the apartment looking for Smith's wallet or Mrs. Smith's pocket book. Then you sit down to see who can tattoo the most complete name of the other being tattooed. Then if you're an even smart New Yorker, you remove the money a week later, attempting to sell it back to them.

Minor Upheaval

One of the minor upheavals caused by the economy-inducing shift still being felt in the Fifth Avenue district. Some proprietors have found that their restaurants are completely out of touch with the needs, with their style of luxurious eating. So many a proprietor is now at his wits' end to find a way to get back his old patrons and to attract new ones.

Nearly 1,000 persons of the Alaska Indian and Eskimo race in North America have been found to be tuberculous.

Plans for New National Park

Abraham Witt—A group of islands, reefs and peninsulas situated in a setting of natural charm on the edge of one of the most beautiful natural basins in the world may become the site of a new national park.

The islands, termed the Abraham group, reflect a total of 12 miles of shoreline with varied characteristics. The mainland area has formed more than 100 miles of shoreline, and the islands are covered with a dense growth of trees, bushes and vines.

Although the scenery of the islands is of the highest order, it is not for its scenic beauty alone that the park is proposed. The islands are also to be made a national park if the effort of Representative Gilmore are successful in congress.

A bill introduced by Congressman H. H. Gilmore, Washington, D. C., to establish a park, is pending in congress now.

At Lake Hubbell, the picturesque center of the approved 12 islands, the two chosen dwellings in Washington, where there was erected about 1876, before it became a summer resort. Mrs. Abraham Lincoln, at one time, built a cottage on the shore and lived there for a number of the years. Many distinguished visitors, including Mrs. Lincoln herself, have been entertained at the cottage.

The country was so pleasant, so accessible, from home who can't afford to pay for vacations services, and those who remember the reputations of the society's vicepresidents in good. The other afternoon I dropped in to see Henry Morris, the superintendent, and to put a face on the sort of service Stevens's.

Actually, Morris told me, they have just about the same business that human beings do. While I was there a distant arrived in her husband, carrying a bobtailed terrier that was suffering from a case of eczema. And another brought a decrepit cat that was suffering from dementia. It, or outside, disposition, was at the vaguest curious as a bat with beginning insanity.

Not Self-Poisoning

It would seem to us strange that a cat should poison itself by some insects and snakes can be considered in their bodies with out harm to them, but this is explained by the fact that every form of life has a chemical make-up and what is poisonous to one is not to another. Thus the poisonous venom in the snake's mouth does not affect the snake itself.

Sustaining Soups

Various Good Things

This is the season of the year when fruits are at their best, and it is a splendid time to make preserves, jams, jellies, marmalades and conserves. The housewife who does not do some of this work should be glad that it is so economical of current use. It is so large a saving in the cost of living to do so.

The art of canning is a most useful and valuable accomplishment, and it is the part of housekeeping of every young miss and woman. Domestic science should be done, and the most accomplished will soon acquire it.

The indoor sport should be kept enough to bring the children in close touch with nature, and to make them love the open. They can of most of their amusement in a simpler way enough to allow the mind to be free from the strain of the day's work. The pleasantness should be the keynote with the work at the center. Such games as tennis, golf and croquet may be had made and will add greatly to the pleasure of the day. Let us see all the natural ties to do is to put forth some kindness every day. Each piece is then ready to serve.

Cocktail Sauce

Those who enjoy the sizzling of lobster tails will like the simpler one of fruit prepared from grapefruit or pineapple will like a lobster tails sauce. Take two teaspoonfuls of grated horse radish, three tablespoonfuls of catsup, one teaspoonful of salt, two tablespoonfuls of lemon juice, four tablespoonfuls of grapefruit juice and enough of a teaspoonful of tobasco sauce. Mix all the ingredients and pour over the cocktails.

For spring lamb mint sauce is favored. Crush a bunch of mint, cover with a tablespoonful of cold of water and lemon juice, boiling too, add a tablespoonful of powdered sugar and serve. Have the mint finely chopped.

Serve mayonnaise on cooked meat—finely instead of the usual butter or cream sauce.

Most earthquakes originate in or near the edges of the continental platforms which are positioned by the collapse of large areas of the earth's crust. Vast Sums Left Unclaimed

London—Lured now forget that you had a million dollars?

Someone in England has, and the sum total of fortunes that he and others have "overlooked" amounts to $20,000,000.

This vast sum lies in the hands of the officials of the customs exchequer, which every year benefits to the extent of approximately $1,000,000 by the failure of an army of shareholders to claim the interest on their government stock.

That this figure is underestimated is admitted to the officials of the exchequer. It is the opinion of experts that it would be necessary to add at least another million pounds to avoid a flood of spurious claims. The present position of the funds of England is so well-nigh one claimant appears for a hitherto unclaimed stock, and then advertise for the rightful claimants to the same stock.

One reason that people forget such extensive property is that many stock holders go abroad and are never heard from again. Then there are aged or ailing persons, who forget that they possess stock, and there are the hundreds of persons who when they die leave no heirs or any knowledge of connections.

A city so recently invested out the fact that an English woman, who had died at Marseilles at the age of nineteen, was entitled to £200,000 in stocks, and Chancery to accumulated dividends, yet she had been constantly borrowing from her relatives.

The finance act of 1921 gives to the national exchequer all dividends unclaimed after five years, although the stocks remain the holders' names for another ten years.

CHARLEVOIX

The village of Charlevoix, which by virtue of extremely central location in the air proclaims for the impartial suffrage of the county, has certainly been demonstrated as the county seat by a unanimous vote of the Board of Supervisors recognize as fine a site as any village in Northern Michigan. Had the grounds upon which the village is being built been sampled out and made to order they could not have been better adapted to the purpose for which they were designed. The dock reach from Lake Michigan and separated from it by a narrow high, level, farming land, into Pine Lakes, one of the finest sheets of water anywhere to be found. Into this Pine Winchell says:

"From the foot of Pine Lake a sweep of 90 degrees brings the eye to the eastern limit. We land, perhaps upon the village of Charlevoix at the outlet of Round Lake. Behind us is a nearly level as the top of which we command the broad expanse of Lake Michigan. Beyond is the farmer. It is a pleasant outlook morning, however early we may venture, and the sunlight reaching through the trees crossings which shadows for one more picture. We emerge from the woods to find ourselves standing upon the elevated bluff overlooking an outlet of a sheet of water as the name given whose name. You feel instinctively transported at once into the midst of the gushing from the depths of habitual quiet into a prospect so vast, so grand, so full of beauty, so diversified in its outlines, and so pleasing in the bright sunshine of a fair October morning. Far away to the south east lies the lake, stretching the eye, ready and ever changing the color of the birds in all the membership of the village. The narrow channel on every side from the shining white lines, and the lake, with their encroaching embraces, while rounded hill-tops, hallow up in rapid succession as the eye turns from land to water. The distant ridges rise in every shade from the shining shore line, and hold the lake in their enchanting embraces, while rounded hill-tops hallow up in rapid succession across the receiving land-scape, till all vast vale, every way green and purple and fold dissolve together in the blended hues of the distant horizon."

Midway between Pine Lake and Lake Michigan, on Round Lake a gem of a place, Round Lake and Lake Michigan Business Manager Lake Michigan on the north and on the north side of the village. A range of land connects this part of the village with the village proper, while on the north side the ground is higher and has no water communication. The village is rapidly filling the past season, and the prospect in the future is encouraging. A dock for sending steamers has for several years been in contemplation. It is now proposed to have a good steam saw mill, a printing office, several stores, public houses, blacksmith shop, and the like. During the season of navigation the steamers touch at the dock daily, and the people come down to find for travel and for receiving supplies and shipping the products of the country. The two acres of Pine Lake were bought at the rate of one hundred dollars per acre, and the village is now platted, and lots are being sold. "From the foot of Pine Lake a sweep of 90 degrees brings the eye to the eastern limit. We land, perhaps upon the village of Charlevoix at the outlet of Round Lake. Behind us is a nearly level as the top of which we command the broad expanse of Lake Michigan. Beyond is the farmer. It is a pleasant outlook morning, however early we may venture, and the sunlight reaching through the trees crossings which shadows for one more picture. We emerge from the woods to find ourselves standing upon the elevated bluff overlooking an outlet of a sheet of water as the name given whose name. You feel instinctively transported at once into the midst of the gushing from the depths of habitual quiet into a prospect so vast, so grand, so full of beauty, so diversified in its outlines, and so pleasing in the bright sunshine of a fair October morning. Far away to the south east lies the lake, stretching the eye, ready and ever changing the color of the birds in all the membership of the village. Towanda, Pa.—"I was working in a silk mill and got so tired and run down that I weighed but 98 pounds. I was not well enough to do my work. As soon as I began to take Lydia E. Old Glory in Song and Story

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

1. The house flag which is flown from the arm of the Statue of Liberty in New York harbor on Flag day each year. On the balcony below stands Mrs. Laura B. Proske, "the Mother of Flag Day."

2. The original "Flag Resolution" of June 14, 1777, in the handwriting of Charles Thomson, secretary of the Second Continental congress.

3. Capt. William Driver, the sea ar (Mass.) sea captain, who gave the name of "Old Glory" to the American flag.

4. Base relief on the base of the Francis Scott Key Memorial monument at Fort McHenry, Md., which perpetuates the song of the man who wrote "The Star Spangled Banner," the national anthem.

5. "The Stars and Stripes Forever!"—A thrilling incidents of the Revolution. The British evacuating after the Yorktown surrender, nailed the British flag to the flagstaff at the Battery and then greased the pole. A barefoot sailor boy undertook to climb up, take down the enemy flag and nail the American flag to the pole. From the reproduction of the famous painting by Henry Mowat in "The Winning of Freedom," volume of "The Pageant of America." Yale University Press.

Flag Day, A popular holiday which is by the United States and is observed with appropriate ceremonies.

Flag Day observed flag bulletin widely known as the Star Spangled Banner. This banner accompanied a resolution by popular choice of another custom, dictated by definite arrangement official adoption of Key's song as our national anthem was taken until 1931.

The scene is Salem, Mass. The it is August 10, 1861. Down at the Salem wharves a crowd of curious persons is gathered in front of the shop of Charles Doggett, which is about to start on a journey around the world. William Driver, the master of the clipper brigantine, is one of the first Salem's shipmen who have entered the service of business part of the globe. He is about to start his vessels Americanism and the deep love for his country. But the shipboard crew thought it was a gift which these boats will prosper now as building the ship.

Captain Driver is an able sailor, a stern disciplining the men under him and humble looked in it. Standing on the wharf, he watches with the carefully manicured spaces. "An excellent ensign for us under the sea," he says to himself, with unspoken thought," he says to him the captain of the ship as of departure in the form of a triangle. When ready the pilots stepped forward and taking the flasket in hand sprinkled it over the stern and dedicated it to Vishnu the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost—invoking the gifts. The triangle upward as the name of earth, then casting on that spirit of Prosper, Rudolph and Sanctify us to bless the national emblem and prosper the ventures and their friends. The flag thus consecrated was then hoisted to the masthead.

As to Stanton, he holds his gift to Captain Driver as an object of the love and esteem of which it is peculiar at the moment. Quite fully upon the crowd as the new flag unfolds in all its beauty. To Captain Driver, who has just heard the cries of the workers, comes the inspiration to perform a rite of state. Standing alert he cries out, "Go call her roll court, back, old lady!" And the crowd cheers as the flag is run up to the characteristic instruments of full music, although the sailors, friends and neighbors know neither of the three persons that ever have raised another emblem in the history of the American flag. For long are the cries of "Old Glory and Driver" to our national banner.

In ten other countries has the national flag been given an inspiring song to written as has been the stars and stripes to the United States. From the earliest days of the republic it has been a favorite theme of the poets. One of the most famous of the poets, one of the early 19th—was which it has inspired is that national classic written by Joseph Hopkins Drake early in the Nineteenth century. Nearly every American of another time or another who recited these stirring lines:

THE AMERICAN FLAG

When Freedom from her mountain height
Unfurled her standard to the air,
She tore the azure robe of night,
And set the stars of glory there.
She mingled with its gorgeous dyes
The milky baldric of the skies,
And striped its pure celestial white

THE MAKERS OF THE FLAG

Five mentioned as I passed over the great river, the Mississippi, the Missouri, and the Ohio. The United States, the emblem of freedom, was seen on the banks of the Mississippi, the Missouri, and the Ohio. I was glad to see that the flag was there, and that it was flying. I was glad to see that the flag was there, and that it was flying. I was glad to see that the flag was there, and that it was flying.

DISCOURAGING OUTLOOK

The most prominent events and issues of reconstruction of the business machinery of the United States Government is a serious matter, which needs very high authority—Business Administration of Warren G. Harding, who has entered the service as chairman of the Pierce Commission on Expenditures in the Executive Departments upon the Republican landslide nationally.

Fresh from conferences with the ablest of Government executives he has held such in the departments of business and industry, but few executives had more attention as shrinking values of property, particularly farm property, and the consequent difficulties of the nation has been more serious than at present. Secretary Hoover's office finds much of the economic ills of the nation due to the disturbance in foreign trade relations and the stifling of private enterprise.

What the government is doing now in surrounding of industry it had better business men as counsel, they will do it more quickly and more economically than by working the Republican administration for Senator. He is not accomplishing more than Mrs. McCormick of Illinois, who put up $25,000. But she won the nomination, and Grundy was badly licked. Whom Newberry of Michigan, was ousted several years ago, it was because he spent less than $200,000. Vare spend $800,000 in Pennsylvania in 1926.

"What price glory" in senatorships represent, anyhow?

I heard the almost-deluded Professor James driving his car into the garage at midnight this morning. Where do you suppose he had been all night?

Well, Mrs. Jones said my wife that he saw a red lantern beside the excavation down the street and had two lives waiting for it to change to green."

Mother: "What did mama's little baby learn to attend today?"

Son: "I learned two kids not to call me mama's baby."

"When did they first get the idea of using bones for transportation?"
"When Brigham Young went on his honeymoon."

AGAIN WE PLAY

Wednesday, such a big "E" will be in evidence and number for the rest they are five months. The season of closed is now in the process of being the many surprises and those who have wagged the heroines and the goats indoors are now emerging for those sensible, fresh air and the additional enjoyment of life that goes with those more healthful activities.

Every summer brings a tremendous increase in all sorts of pernicious summer nuisances. There can be no question about the fact that America is fourth continent by a greater degree than ever before.

Motoring, or touring, as some prefer to call it, unfortunately is the worst offender. Perhaps educational desires or mere health are responsible for this. Or maybe it's a throwback from preceding generations of wandering.

Motor hunting, sailing and every other diversion of outdoor sports are undoubtedly more popular. Tennis courses and courses the baseball diamond and riding paths are crowded to the full capacities of where you go.

All in the interests of health—health so necessary to overcome the strain and nerve-racking pace of modern life.

Some might argue that all this increased interest in sports and recreation is due to a general widening of their health-giving benefits. But the inherent desire for play such pastimes certainly are counteracted on the tremendously organized scale of eating habits. The ever-growing greater attention today than ever before.

When when the average business man and woman eats the most tempting food he can get, and in the most appetizing manner, simultaneous from the waiter, and a general demand for healthful desserts are what fits and find nourishment.

The search for health through correct eating should have become a most American custom. And no growing necessity exists in America today.

THE BIG LITTLE BROTHER

So far have we grown here in America, limiting up our skyscraper, pushing out our railroads and highways, large and long into the farm lands and coal and iron and copper mines, that we have come to think in terms of "big" business. Whatever we think of industry we think of size, of shipping, of millions of automobiles, of power and light utilities. And when we consolidate our motives, we bring together giant banks, or textile plants, or companies of every description.

Nevertheless, even in our country of mass conditions and corporations, there is still room and need for individuals within themselves which are not merely units of the whole of things in life. They may be tool makers, cars, bakers or three makers or shoe shiners that so they report, just millions of dollars of investment capital.

There is room in our midst for supporting to find what once were our small or industries connecting our towns and cities. Recently the U. S. Martin, president of the Mote Motor Truck & Equipment Corporation, makers of the automobile, motorcar and other automobile accessories, united for Europe, and for long time and supported it at his own makes and industrial. But when a long time ago were "doodads" in our everyday life are now necessities. The "gas tanks" and "speedgas" of many years gone are as essential now as the things upon which they are placed.

Europe still makes its laces and watches, cuts diamonds and saws whole forests into matches. But Europe also manufactures automobiles, and in our increasing numbers, are the nations of our farseeing chief executives seek to sound out international machines in Europe, in order not to a race upon that Europe is coming forward as a world producer of automobiles.

Before leaving, Mr. Martin said that America is to be "indebted for one of all the automobiles built in the world in a large order. But that adds, our "luxury" for the to consume his own cost is probably a better indicator of just how large sums of our little trainer manufacturing really are.

WHAT PRICE GLORY?

The revelation regarding the Pennsylvania primaries that "it costs to be Joe" Grundy spent $250,000 in winning the Republican nomination for Senator. He is not accomplishing more than Mrs. McCormick of Illinois, who put up $25,000. But she won the nomination, and Grundy was badly licked. Whom Newberry of Michigan, was ousted several years ago, it was because he spent less than $200,000. Vare spend $800,000 in Pennsylvania in 1926.

"What price glory" in senatorships represent, anyhow?

I heard the almost-deluded Professor James driving his car into the garage at midnight this morning. Where do you suppose he had been all night?

Well, Mrs. Jones said my wife that he saw a red lantern beside the excavation down the street and had two lives waiting for it to change to green."

A large egg of enormous size, a product of the Dibbs Barred Rock yard was left at this office for the inspection and benefit of the publisher, last Saturday. The egg of average something over four ounces—a trifle more than five ounces perfect in contour and finish. Eggs of this type are not new to the Harper yard, neither are they of frequent occurrence on other yards. The one left at this office was a perfect specimen in every detail and if such could be produced in quantities the basis for a big profit on eggs would quickly change from per dozen to per pound. The egg from the Harper Rock section bred is length 2¾ inches and in circumference 7¾ inches.

MAT MOORE PASSES

EXPIRED SUDDENLY WHEN RIDING IN AUTOMOBILE

Mr. Mat Moore one of Charlevoix's long time residents passed away Saturday in an automobile near Bay Shore as he was returning from Petoskey, where he had gone earlier in the day.

Mr. Moore was born at Buffalo, New York, Christmas day 1864. Ten years later he came to Charlevoix and this place has since been his permanent home.

Funeral services were from the Methodist Church Tuesday forenoon with the pastor, Rev. J. E. Lockyer, officiating.

Mr. Moore is survived by one daughter, Mrs. Fay Babcock of Mackinaw City, two sisters, Mrs. Lovell Moore of Charlevoix, Mrs. Walter of Detroit and Leon Moore whose present address is unknown.

Mr. Moore's death was not unexpected to either family members or intimate acquaintance, due to some least derangement of long standing. For many weeks past his condition has been serious, hence though he expired suddenly, friends and family were not greatly surprised at his passing.

Of this number 288 were convictions for violations of the fish laws. Of the total number of convictions, 90 were for various violations of the fish spearing laws.

Oaths Check Lion That Hits Farmer

Benton—Entering the farm yard to ascertain the cause of the bellowing among the cows, a farm manager at Deutschland-ebenhoch-Graf Friesla, received a shock in the form of a lion charging around in new visit his assistant was a fine specimen of an African lion with a remarkable set of well preserved teeth.

He told the authorities that he gave the lion a hard round of cursing which caused the beast to retreat. As they went into the house and, looking through the window he observed that he had escaped not from one lion but two.

DIES AS HE SEEKS REVENGE ON BEAR

Park Warden's Body Found Marked by Claws.

Edmonton, Alta.—Forest rangers searching the Timpish valley of the Canadian Rockies found the mangled body of a man lying in the snow near an overturned sleigh.

The cause of his death is unclear. Indeed, he may first think have fallen victim to the huge grizzly bear, one of still four of the mountains, the rangers guess, for man and grizzly locked dead had evident a final wrestling match. Or he may have died of the grizzly strike and, only a short time ago, had returned to life from coma with the desire of revenge. Following out the latter theory, the rangers believe that this apparently unprovoked attack was the work of a bear which he was trying to kill.

The dead man was P. H. Geddes, member of a well-known Bristol family with many relatives, a warden in Jasper National park. At the end of the last month he left the mountains seeking to regain his shattered health and took a position as game warden to occupy his time.

Into last summer he was visiting in Edmonton. He left the store of his host with a gunnel. The body has been found by his native dog-sled and companion, but says nothing to the rangers because he is almost overcome with grief and fatigue.

The dead man's sled was found a few miles from the scene of the tragedy. It is badly shattered and the dog-sled and companion, but says nothing to the rangers because he is almost overcome with grief and fatigue.

Arm Hits Mail Box as He Rides on Truck; Dies

Muskegon, Mich.—The desire to greet his brothers who had come to pay a birthday call brought death to Peter Hoffstra, thirty-one years old, of Fuller.

Hoffstra was knocked from the running board of a truck when his arm struck a mail box protected from the truck post. He died a short while later at the office of a physician here.

The man was a strong shovel operator and was on a holiday. He decided to go out to the place where the crew was working on highway 51, near Bamboo lake, and accepted a ride on a truck.

Just before reaching the scene of operations he saw his brother, Arnold, approaching in an automobile. He stood up on the running board and extended his hand. As the machine swerved down, but was hit by the mail box.

Rattler Proves Hitch Hiker on Texas Auto

Buena Creek, Texas.—A 10-inch diamond-backed rattlesnake, with a lust for travel, and a motorist making a tour of West Texas, probably combined to make a thrilling stolen attended and wary of future requests for a change of battery water.

T. C. Dobbs, of Pecos, Texas realized with driving proximity on the way that he was playing host to the rides-sinking reptile. He became cognizant of the fact rather abruptly, however, when the attendant informed him of his presence of the snake, which was curled up placidly on the battery box, having ridden a distance of some 500 miles.

DAILY VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL OPENS NEXT MONDAY, JUNE 9TH

There is something thrilling about a matter as one that is not comparable to any other advertising. The very interest is carefully limited and those who are in the arrangement may be terrific-ally interested. If the officers can not be found at home and they the community are found below, the former are of a strategic position; but the latter are in the midst of the noise and the motive power of the town. Discussions or inability to compel the problem and steer a course may offset the entrance quite as much as anything else. The penalty for these conditions at sea is so severe that the mere desperate efforts are made to avoid such an occurrence with great vividness in Stephen Martin's story, "The Mystery of the Alabama," presented as a serial in The Sentinel commencing with the issue of June 10. It is a story of romance and adventure which no reader should miss.

Mountain With a Hippopotamus Mouth

NEW MEXICO, within the last few years, has become the Pied Piper of the nations. Sounding a strange and persistent medley of incantations hurled thousands for every sonnet fancied on the reeds, she has drawn from over American state and from many foreign nations an army of pilgrims, lured with rosy banners of riches, or, even thoroughly free to make their Pied Piper stop, for a day, to a passage, a single note, of her siren music. Nothing like monuments. The multimillionaires from Missouri traveled in style to, or near, every thousand in Dallas; its comforts that lumber-camp army of pilgrims that visited Seattle for the Alaska-Yukon exhibit.

And to this day, with the rest that title, the appropriate-sounding name, nobody is set on the tourist trail. If you would see Taos Pueblo you must journey into deep mountain country, and when you get there you may look for some time before you find a native who can speak English. Taos, Acoma and Laguna are the only pueblos left in the Southwest, now that Isleta has become a suburb of Albuquerque, where Indians are permitted to live in white men's houses and ride in white men's automobiles.

Taos Pueblo, the northernmost, is the most picturesque and the most primitive. Its two communal houses, each five stories high, are made of sun-dried brick, laid in mud. Ladders lead to the roofs, and from roof to roof to the ground. Each family has its own apartment, or apartments, and its own ovens, built outside the walls. Here the Indians live as they have lived for centuries, and here they cling to their ancient religious rites.

Acoma is the oldest continuously inhabited town in the United States. Its people claim descent from the Montezumas, and they have lived on the same rock for a thousand years. Laguna is the largest of the pueblos, and the most progressive. Many of its people have left the pueblo to live in white men's towns, and many have married white men and women. Laguna has a school, a church, a store and a post office.

Isleta, the most southerly of the pueblos, is the most accessible. It is only a few miles from Albuquerque, and the Indians have become commercialized. They have automobiles, and they sell pottery and blankets to tourists. Isleta is the only pueblo that has a resident white doctor, and the only one that has a hospital. Its people are prosperous, and they are increasing in numbers, while the population of the other pueblos is decreasing.

The Indians of the pueblos are a peaceful people. They have never been warlike, and they have never been cruel. They have always been kind to animals, and they have always been hospitable to strangers. They are a religious people, and their religion is a mixture of Christianity and pagan rites. They are skilled in many arts and crafts, and they are famous for their pottery, their blankets, their silver and turquoise jewelry, and their dances.

The Indians of the pueblos are a vanishing race. They are dying out, and they are losing their culture. They are becoming more and more like white men, and less and less like Indians. They are losing their language, their religion, their customs, their arts and crafts, their dances, their songs, their stories, their legends, their traditions, their history, their identity, their soul.

They are losing their land, their water, their livestock, their crops, their homes, their health, their wealth, their happiness, their hope, their future, their existence.

They are losing their battle for survival, and they are losing it fast.

They are losing it because they are losing their culture, and they are losing their culture because they are losing their contact with the land.

The land is the source of their culture, and the land is the source of their contact with the earth, the sky, the sun, the moon, the stars, the wind, the rain, the snow, the seasons, the cycles, the rhythms, the harmonies, the mysteries, the wonders, the beauties, the powers, the gifts, the blessings, the curses, the truths, the realities, the meanings, the purposes, the values, the virtues, the goals, the ideals, the dreams, the hopes, the faiths, the loves, the lives, the deaths, the souls, the gods, the spirits, the ghosts, the demons, the devils, the angels, the saints, the sinners, the heroes, the villains, the victims, the victors, the losers, the winners, the losers, the winners, the losers, the winners

Miss Nellie Minick and some other friends are reported some Wednesday afternoon in a student's dog. Query: Miss Nellie. They report a "splendid time," which we think no one will dispute. Myer Levinson did a brave act last Thursday that should be added to his already favorable thought. One of the careless teams became frightened and ran away. The driver was enemy, and as the team passed north across the bridge, Myer caught the rear steps of the vehicle, and with much difficulty climbed aboard. When he reached the drivers seat he found that the lines were hanging on the ground. The young man bore down upon the horses' backs, and by reaching out on the tongue, taking in the lines, and stopping the beasts. The adventure was a decided credit to him.

Petoskey Record

The Charlevoix Sentinel, quoting from the Record as to the storage of the Door county shore in Wisconsin, as seen by Mr. Watson Snyder, says: "We are sorry to dispel this beautiful theatre, but what Mr. Snyder probably saw was Fox or Belvoir Island. Mr. Smith is undoubtedly a man of intelligence, but it's intelligence is not impeachable in scientific matters. There are a thousand and more people in Petoskey who have witnessed the passage of Beaver and Fox Islands in both the forms of "looming and mirage at sea," the former being due to refraction alone and the latter to both refraction and reflection. Mr. Snyder made no mistake, nor would any one of Petoskey's people unduly blame him for his statement. Many of the most prominent officials embarked on the road for safety measures, pathway and the traffic fatalities are greatly lessened, both in their occurrence and in their ratio to the thousands of motor vehicles.

The conference was the outgrowth of engineering attention and suggestions of professional officials, which have been working steadily and getting somewhere for the past three years. The past three years. There are hopeful signs that a new code will be adopted in all of the States, to govern traffic and the highway regulations uniform throughout the entire United States.

Look at me! My grandmother she's a sock and you don't see me's earth for sound of you!"

"Yes," said the engineer, "but you didn't come from grandmother. Truth is a very little man!"

DIPLOMACY IN CAKE BAKING

Every age calls for diplomacy in one kind or another. Even the cake baking age is no exception. Many a housewife has found that a cake will not rise, or will fall in the middle, because of inexperience in regulating the temperature of the oven. Many a cake has been spoiled by opening the oven door too soon, or by not having the oven hot enough at the start. Many a cake has been spoiled by having the oven too hot at the start, causing the cake to brown on the outside before it has had time to rise.

Many cooks have learned by experience that a cake will not rise if the oven is too cool at the start, but they have not learned that the oven must be kept at the same temperature throughout the baking. Many cooks have learned that a cake will fall if the oven is opened too soon, but they have not learned that the oven must be opened at all during the first half of the baking.

MORE BRITISH ADVICE

A la Pinero on Birmingham linguistic planning. The President drew at Cleveland. He gave, out of the wisdom of his years, the following five golden footprints for wayfaring businessmen. The statement which follows is the result of a conference between the New York and Cleveland Chambers of Commerce.

1. Be honest in your business so that you can look everybody in the face without embarrassment.

2. Be sure that your goods are honestly worth what you ask for them.

3. Be sure that your boasts in your advertisements are facts.

4. Be sure that you pay your employees enough to enable them to live in comfort and decency.

5. Be sure that you pay your debts promptly.

The moment we start to comment on this we realize to the American mind of the point of the platitude. Of course, rather than the statement of fact. Of course, we all know that we should do these things. But the platitude is the point. It is a fact of human nature that we all know what is right and wrong, but we do not always do the right thing. We all know that we should be honest in our business dealings, but we are not always honest. We all know that we should pay our debts promptly, but we do not always do so. We all know that we should be kind to our employees, but we are not always kind. We all know that we should be truthful in our advertisements, but we are not always truthful. We all know that we should be fair to our competitors, but we are not always fair. We all know that we should be generous to the poor, but we are not always generous. We all know that we should be forgiving to our enemies, but we are not always forgiving. We all know that we should be humble before God, but we are not always humble. We all know that we should be grateful for our blessings, but we are not always grateful. We all know that we should be patient with our children, but we are not always patient. We all know that we should be loving to our wives, but we are not always loving. We all know that we should be faithful to our husbands, but we are not always faithful. We all know that we should be true to our friends, but we are not always true. We all know that we should be honest with ourselves, but we are not always honest. We all know that we should be humble before God, but we are not always humble. We all know that we should be grateful for our blessings, but we are not always grateful. ROADS MAKE FARM PROFITS

Profitable farming is impossible where good roads are lacking. Poor roads increase transportation costs, limit the farmer's market and depress the farm value. This is the conclusion of a committee of the Michigan Engineering Society which has been investigating the relation between roads and farm prosperity. The committee reports that in some sections of Michigan poor roads increase the cost of marketing the farmer's crops as much as 25 cents per bushel. In other words, if the farmer has to haul his crops over poor roads to market he must get 25 cents more per bushel than the farmer who has good roads in order to get the same net return for his crops.

The committee also reports that in some sections of Michigan poor roads have caused the abandonment of farms which were formerly profitable. Many farms have been abandoned because the owners could not get their crops to market over poor roads. Many farms have been abandoned because the owners could not get their children to school over poor roads. Many farms have been abandoned because the owners could not get their mail over poor roads. The cure of gold brought those spirits of pioneers across the plains in the 1850's days to use the incentive as an added impetus, continuous, has been the fuel of thousands of lives who have learned the lesson of thrift. THE LONDON TREATY

The practical fact about the London naval treaty is that it opens the way for additional naval economies. The treaty provides for a navy in line with Great Britain's needs. Other nations will be obliged to limit their navies to the same standard. Thus a further step will be taken in the direction of disarmament. The London treaty is a great British document. While the American naval experts may not agree with the British experts in every detail, the fact remains that the agreement of all the London conference is a tribute to the wisdom of the naval experts and politicians of Great Britain and of Japan as well as of the United States. It is the general view of disinterested

J. O. Tobin, an Encyclopedia Britannica salesman in England, has written a letter to Premier Baldwin, which is circulated in this country by the Britannica, in which he says:

"Your government has a golden opportunity to help the unemployment problem by purchasing power of wages as Henry Ford and Edward Filene have done. The new living wages which Ford and Filene are paying to their workers have put purchasing power into the hands of the people, especially into those industries which are producing the things that are needed in the home. Instead of our having unemployment, we have not enough workmen to supply the demand for many articles, and particularly is this true of the building trades. Why not, therefore, put your unemployed to work building houses, and thus relieve the congestion in the cities?"

Mr. Tobin is not responsible for the opinions of the American people, but he is entitled to his own opinions, and he has a right to express them. Whether they are worth anything is another matter.

ROADS MAKE FARM PROFITS

Profitable farming depends upon good highway transportation, the latest report from the state highway department says. Thus the statement is made by the department that "farming resulted in a greater prosperity in those counties which had the best roads."

It is interesting to note that the counties which have the greatest mileage of hard surfaced roads are the counties which have the greatest wealth. Wayne county, which has the largest mileage of hard surfaced roads, is the richest county in the state, and other counties rank in wealth according to the mileage of hard surfaced roads which they have.

The state highway department points out that the farmer is the one who profits most by improving the highway system. Before the automobile came into use, the farmer was tied to his farm. He was practically a prisoner. He could not get to town except in the most favorable weather. Now he can get to town in any kind of weather. He can get his produce to market when he wishes. He can get to church, to lodge, to the theatre and to all other places of entertainment when he wishes.

Many good roads have been built in this state during the past few years, but there are many counties which have not yet started to build roads. They have been content to let the farmer struggle along with the mud roads. They have been content to let the farmer struggle along with the mud roads. They have been content to let the farmer struggle along with the mud roads.

VITAL TO PROGRESS

The loss of gold brought threats against it on the part of many countries. Some of the countries which have been the most vocal in their threats against gold are those which have been the most dependent upon it. The United States has been the most dependent upon gold of any country in the world. It has been the most dependent upon gold because it has been the most prosperous country in the world. It has been the most prosperous country in the world because it has been the most dependent upon gold.

The United States has been the most dependent upon gold because it has been the most prosperous country in the world. It has been the most prosperous country in the world because it has been the most dependent upon gold.

A SHOCK MAY BE NECESSARY

The people will not be democratized, but they must sometimes be shocked into a realization of the fact that the burden of maintaining a democracy rests on those as much rather than on the shoulders of elected officials who seem to belong charged with the idea that as soon as they gain power their chief duty is to part us to restrict the rights and liberties of the individual.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

Frank F. Kinsley

We are told metropolitan news papers now making a drive on the protective tariff against that this country is now suffering from over production, and that our only chance to dispose of our surplus production is to be seek markets abroad, and in order to gain markets abroad we must admit the further invasion of our markets by the cheap labor products of foreign lands.

Many will wonder how it can be said that we are suffering from overproduction. It is a fact that hundreds of thousands of wage earners have been thrown out of work in the United States through their inability to compete with cheap labor in countries where output exceeds the shelves of stores in the United States. Is there not a more immediate and profitable prospect of consumption by these unemployed men were they back at work than among the peasants, coolies and pagans of foreign lands who are fattening on the dole, or starving on a few cents per day?

Abroad we must meet on their own terms the makers of the very cheap labor products we are now trying to seek, mostly instead of absorbing the output of our industries. If we cannot undersell them at home, how can we do it abroad?

Our only hope of gaining markets abroad is by securing them with products which we can make cheaper than the foreigner, because our large home market here permits the economy of mass production.

The operations of the present tariff law, which is pronounced to have destroyed our foreign trade, proves to the contrary. When we keep out foreign products we are compelled to buy abroad articles of luxury and of necessity we do not produce here in greater and greater quantity. We are enabled to spend more in foreign lands. Our prosperity has been so great that of foreign lands, at present, the general prosperity of the world.

The truth is that the outcry against the tariff is a false cry against a cure for existing difficulties in labor, some at home and abroad on all competitive commodities, is chiefly inspired by international financiers who want to collect the vast amounts they have loaned abroad at the sacrifice of American production, and the international industrialists who wish to manufacture in foreign cheap labor markets and sell with as little interference as possible in our markets. That these financiers and industrialists are killing the goose that laid their golden eggs does not affect their short-sighted attitude, or that of merchandisers who want the opportunity to buy foreign goods regardless of the fact that they can no longer buy the purchasing power of their customers in the United States.

We seem to be up against the problem of whether our tariffs shall be adjusted to suit home needs or foreign demands. Foreign nations with sky-high tariffs and forty-seven varieties of interfering with our exports to their countries, are maybe not so unlucky in the effect that if we look out for ourselves they will eat out their throats. They are now and always have been doing a good job of looking out for themselves and presumably they will continue to do this whatever our tariff rates. The first job of our government is to look out for our own people, and something that job seems to be somewhat neglected.

TAKING TO THE AIR

The American public is taking to the air.

Last year 90,000 persons made scheduled trips on passenger planes —double the 1928 number, and there will ride this year.

The people are becoming air-minded. The airplane has come to be a novelty, and has taken its place along with railroads, buses and automobiles as a standard mode of transportation.

Little more than a year has passed since the modern passenger transport planes came into use. They are models of comfort, speed and dependability.

Who can wonder that they are a popular means of travel?

A man is that large irrational creature who is always looking for home atmosphere in a hotel and hotel-ness around the house.

ORCHARD GLEANINGS

CHERRY SLUG MAY DO MUCH DAMAGE

Pests Also Attack Foliage of Pear and Plum Trees.

Injury to the leaves of cherry trees by the cherry slug sometimes results in a good deal of damage to the trees. The slug breeds especially in June and is present in August.

The cherry slug commonly known as the pear slug attacks the pear and cherry leaves, eating away the upper tissue between the veins, leaving a lacelike appearance. The slug is a sluglike larva of a sawfly. It is dull green in color and when full grown is about one-half inch long. A pupa is formed in the soil, from which the adult sawfly emerges.

Three remedies have been recommended for the cherry slug. They are spraying with arsenate of lead, dusting with powdered hellebore and dusting with sulphur. Arsenate of lead is the most commonly used remedy. Two pounds of paste lead arsenate or one pound of powdered lead arsenate to 50 gallons of water is the usual spray mixture. Hellebore is used as a dust, one part to three parts of flour or land plaster. Sulphur is also used as a dust.

Three applications are recommended for the cherry slug. They are made as follows: First, when the blossoms are falling; second, when the fruit is about half grown, and third, about two weeks before the fruit begins to color. Arsenate of lead is the most practical remedy to use on account of the ease with which it may be applied to the trees. Hellebore is also a very good remedy, but it is more troublesome to apply than arsenate of lead.

Plum and pear trees are also attacked by the cherry slug, which eats the foliage in the same manner as it does the cherry leaves. The same remedies are used for the plum and pear as for the cherry.

Growing Pickles Very Profitable

Offers Opportunity for Summer Work by School Boys and Girls

Small cucumbers, commonly known as "pickles," are a crop that offers many inducements for summer work by boys and girls. Many of the pickles are grown in small fields of one to two acres for canning, the demand being heavy at intervals throughout the summer. Pickles are also grown in the garden, and during their growth require considerable attention. Weeding, cultivating, and especially spraying to control insects and diseases must be done frequently.

Pickles are usually planted in hills, three seeds to the hill, and thinned to two plants to the hill. Cucumber beetles, striped and spotted, are very destructive to young plants. They may be controlled by spraying with arsenate of lead, two pounds to 50 gallons of water, or by dusting with powdered hellebore, one part to three parts of flour or land plaster. Spraying or dusting should be done every week or ten days during the season.

Anthracnose, bacterial blight, and downy mildew are the most common diseases of cucumbers. Anthracnose appears as sunken spots on the fruit, which become covered with pinkish masses of spores. Bacterial blight causes angular spots on the leaves, which later become dry and brittle. Downy mildew causes yellow spots on the leaves, which later turn brown and die. Spraying with Bordeaux mixture as soon as the vines begin to run will control these diseases.

Pickles should be picked every day or two, as they grow very rapidly. Those that are to be used for pickling should be picked when they are from two to four inches long. Pickles that are to be used for slicing should be left on the vines until they are from six to eight inches long. Pickles that are left on the vines too long become yellow and worthless.

Pickles are usually sold by the bushel, and the grower is paid according to the grade of the pickles. Prices vary from year to year, depending on the supply and demand. Prices have been as high as $1 a bushel for the best pickles, and as low as 10 cents a bushel for poor pickles. Prices usually average about 50 cents a bushel for the best pickles.

THE GRAND TRAVERSE REGION

Its Beautiful Lakes and Bays.—Typography of the Region.—Interesting Sketch By Judge Ramsdell, of the Thirteenth Circuit

An important feature in the geography of this country, and especially of its northern portion, is the deep indentations of the coast, formed by numerous rivers and navigable lakes extending back into the country from different points along the shore. Starting at Charlevoix and going southward along the coast, we find first, Pine Lake, a body of water two miles wide and fifteen miles long, extending at right angles with the great lake. Branching from this on the eastward as we go south, is Susan Lake, reaching out 2½ miles further south, both of which are navigable for the largest vessels that float. Passing that point we come to Round Lake, and are connected with Lake Michigan by Pine River, a short stream, but of sufficient size to float a half mile long and was formerly navigable for small steamers. Pursuing the coast southward, we find the entrance of Lake Charlevoix, which is a beautiful sheet of water, nearly circular in form, about four miles in diameter, and connecting by a narrow strait with Lake Michigan. Between Lake Charlevoix and Lake Michigan is situated the village of Charlevoix, which is the county seat of the county of Charlevoix. Lake Charlevoix is almost circular in form, and is connected

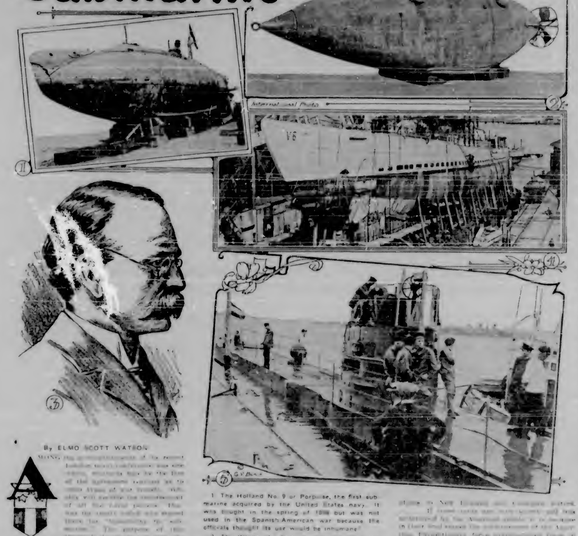
Curbing the Deadly Submarine



By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

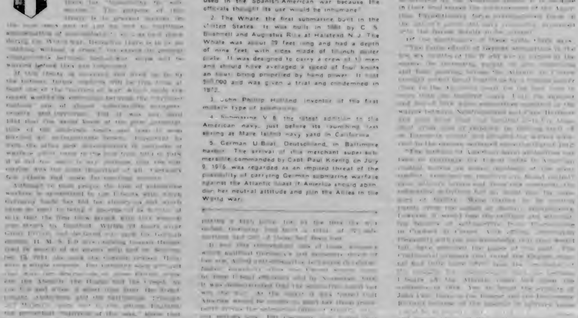
1. The Holland No. 9 or Porpoise, the first submarine acquired by the United States navy. It was bought in the spring of 1898 but was not used in the Spanish-American war because the officials thought its use would be inhumane.

2. The Whale, the first submarine built in the United States. It was built in 1864 by C. S. Bushnell and Augustus Rice at Hastened N. J. The Whale was about 29 feet long and had a depth of nine feet, with a crew of 10. Bushnell motor plate. It was designed to carry a crew of 11 men and showed a fair speed. A speed of four knots an hour, being propelled by hand power. It cost $15,000 and was given a trial and condemned in 1872.

3. John Philip Holland inventor of the first modern type of submarine.

4. Submarine V 8, the latest addition to the American navy, just before its launching last spring at Mare Island navy yard in California.

5. German U-Boat, Deutschland, in Baltimore harbor. The arrival of the merchant submarine, merchant commanded by Capt. Paul Koenig on July 9, 1916, was regarded as an implied threat of the possibility of carrying German submarine warfare against the Atlantic coast if America should adopt an unfriendly attitude and join the Allies in the World war.



By the time the first submarine was launched, Germany had been in need of 37 submarines and had begun building them.

It was this circumstance and successful operation of the U-boats, which sank more than 5,000,000 tons of shipping, that caused America to enter the World war. It was not until the Germans announced that unrestricted submarine warfare would be resumed on February 1, 1917, that President Wilson severed diplomatic relations with Germany. Following this action, on March 18, three American merchant vessels were sunk by submarines without warning and 15 persons were killed.

On the 20th of April, 1917, the day following the declaration of war, the first American submarine casualty occurred when the U-53 sank the destroyer Jacob Jones off the coast of England. Of the crew of 110 men, 64 were lost. The Jacob Jones was the first American warship to be sunk by the enemy during the war.

Following this came a period of the most ruthless submarine warfare in the history of the world. Between April 1 and June 30, 1917, 1,845,000 tons of shipping were destroyed by submarines. This was the largest amount of shipping destroyed in any three months of the war. The peak was reached in April, 1917, when 881,027 tons were destroyed. This was the largest amount of shipping ever destroyed in any month of the war. The average monthly destruction of shipping during the first six months of 1917 was 545,000 tons. The average monthly destruction of shipping during the last six months of the war was 250,000 tons.

Although the submarine campaign was at its height, the United States was preparing to send troops to France. By the end of June, 1917, 14,000 troops had been landed in France. By the end of July, 1917, 30,000 troops had been landed in France. By the end of August, 1917, 48,000 troops had been landed in France. By the end of September, 1917, 63,000 troops had been landed in France. By the end of October, 1917, 77,000 troops had been landed in France. By the end of November, 1917, 95,000 troops had been landed in France. By the end of December, 1917, 110,000 troops had been landed in France.

The submarine campaign was at its height when the United States entered the war. The submarine campaign was at its height when the United States entered the war. The submarine campaign was at its height when the United States entered the war.

GREAT DISMAL SWAMP NOT ALWAYS SO DISMAL

Travel writers sing the land of the Great Dismal Swamp as a great dreary waste of primeval wilderness that only supersonic transport planes or a helicopter can fly over in safety. It is all of these in many respects, but there was a time when the swamp was a busy place. Lake Drummond has an island in the middle of it, and on that island was a village.

The village, which is called Portsmouth, was founded by the Lake Drummond Hunting and Fishing Club in 1763. It was a busy place until the Civil War, when the Union Army destroyed the canal that connected the village with the outside world. Portsmouth never recovered from the destruction of the canal, and by the end of the century it was a ghost town.

Lake Drummond has an island, but it is not the largest island in the swamp. That honor belongs to Bear Island, which is 3,100 acres in area. Bear Island is the site of a 4,000-acre game preserve established by the Virginia Commission of Game and Inland Fisheries. The preserve is open to hunters during the season for deer, bear, and wild turkey.

Bear Island is also the site of a unique experiment in wildlife management. Deer are fed in winter to keep them from starving to death. Hunters are allowed to shoot only bucks with antlers. The result is a herd of deer with a high percentage of large, healthy animals

Girl Slain to Appease Ghost

Las Palmas, Canary Islands.—A weird tragedy of present superstition has just led to a human sacrifice on this island discovered near the little village of Tejeda in the island of Teneriffe in the hills from Orotava to a secluded but quite famous cave. Various members of an ancient society that utilizes many disguises and a secret code of their own, with the aid of a certain native woman, lured Dolores Hernandez, who had died a few days before.

At midnight Hernandez's body disappeared from the cemetery and was found in the cave. Then the society members, with the aid of the native woman, cut off the head of the dead girl and placed it in a basket. Then they began a journey to the village of Tejeda, where they left the head on the doorstep of the house in which Dolores had lived.

Eight members of the family in this house, the last one they left before the head of the dead girl was found, died within a year, and rumors of the tragedy circulated throughout the island.

Finally the police got on the trail of the society and arrested a number of its members. Three were sentenced to prison for life, and the others received terms from two to twenty years.

Hungarian Laughs at Insomnia

Toronto, N. S.—How is the story of a man who for seventy-eight hours, or more, was unable to sleep or to laugh?

The astounding case is told by L. Herman, whose sudden inspiration came when a man stopped to light a cigarette near him and he saw that a Hungarian was carrying two bottles in which to bring beer.

Dr. Herman, who had recently been graduated in medicine in Budapest, Hungary, was called to see the man who was suffering from insomnia. He found that the patient was unable to laugh, even when he tried to tickle him.

Dr. Herman, who had studied the effects of laughter on patients in Hungarian hospitals, decided to try a new method. He went to the nearest cafe and ordered beer in two bottles.

The patient began to laugh as soon as he saw the strange contortions of the doctor.

He then ordered a glass of beer. He poured it into a tall glass and began to drink it. Then he began to laugh. He laughed so hard that he had to put down the glass. Then he began to laugh again. He laughed so hard that he had to put down the glass. Then he began to laugh again. He laughed so hard that he had to put down the glass. Then he began to laugh again

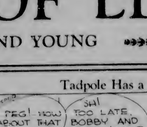
A FAMILY DOCTOR'S LAXATIVE IS BEST



Your health is too important! You cannot afford to experiment with your delicate bowels when constipation, bad breath, headache, gas, nausea, faintness, lack of appetite, no energy, etc., warn of constipation. This applies not only to grown people, but more particularly to children. That's why a family doctor's laxative is always the safe choice.

Dr. Caldwell's syrup Pepsin is prepared today under strict laboratory supervision from fresh laxative herbs and other pure ingredients, and exactly according to Dr. Caldwell's original prescription.

Today, millions of families rely on Dr. Caldwell's Judgment in the selection of their laxative. For Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, in bottles ready for use, sold in all druggists stores, is now the largest selling laxative in the world!

FIRST SUFFRAGIST WAS MARYLAND COLONIST

It may surprise a good many people to learn that the first woman to assert herself in behalf of equal suffrage in America did not belong to this generation but to the seventeenth and not to the 19th century also. Her name was Margaret Brent, and she was a Maryland colonist in 1648.

The most notable difference between Colonel and Governor Brent seems to have been one of sex. She was a woman, and he was a man. Both were born in England, and both came to Maryland in 1638. Governor Brent was a Catholic and a kinsman of Lord Baltimore, who was the proprietor of the Province of Maryland. Colonel Brent was a Protestant and a kinsman of Governor Stone, who was appointed governor of Maryland by King Charles I. Governor Brent was the first person to receive a land grant in the province of Maryland. He was also the first person to be appointed to the office of justice of the peace. He was the first person to be appointed to the office of attorney general. He was the first person to be appointed to the office of treasurer. He was the first person to be appointed to the office of commissioner of the court of errors and appeals. He was the first person to be appointed to the office of commissioner of the court of impeachment. He was the first person to be appointed to the office of commissioner of the court of pardons. He was the first person to be appointed to the office of commissioner of the court of last resort.

Governor Brent was a man of affairs. He was a man of action. He was a man of business. He was a man of property. He was a man of wealth. He was a man of power. He was a man of influence. He was a man of authority. He was a man of prestige. He was a man of dignity. He was a man of importance. He was a man of consequence. He was a man of note. He was a man of mark. CAPITALIST INTERNATIONALISM

In a recent address before the National Association of Newspaper Editors, E. Mandell House, Texas colonel of the London Times and a leading figure behind the scenes in Great Britain and America, pointed out that the great social problems of the future will be solved by the capitalists of the various nations working in the various nations, instead of by the politicians, as heretofore. Col. House, who is the author of the book "Philip Dru, Administrator," which gave up as impossible the solution of the problems of the day by the politicians, and suggested the solution of the same problems by the capitalists, is the confidant of many of the leading statesmen of England and the United States. He has been instrumental, therefore, in bringing about many international agreements which have been of great benefit to the world. The most notable of these agreements was the one which brought about the peace of Versailles, which ended the world war. Col. House was one of the leading figures in the peace conference which followed the world war. He was one of the leading figures in the conference which drew up the league of nations. He was one of the leading figures in the conference which drew up the world court. He was one of the leading figures in the conference which drew up the kellogg anti-war pact. He was one of the leading figures in the conference which drew up the dawes plan. He was one of the leading figures in the conference which drew up the young plan. He was one of the leading figures in the conference which drew up the locarno pact. He was one of the leading figures in the conference which drew up the geneva protocol. Col. House is now in the grasp of another great movement of mankind, the movement for the establishment of the United States under the auspices of the capitalists instead of the politicians. In doing so he will have taken the initiative in the movement which will result in the establishment of the United States of Europe, and the United States of the World. Col. The Yellowstone National park is certainly not the original example, but it is the most striking one in the country. Kill Potato Bug by Using Poison

Calcium Arsenate Is Effective and Cheapest Material on Market.

Calcium arsenate is the most economical and effective poison now in use to control the Colorado potato beetle or potato bug, as the pest is commonly known.

Either Dust or Spray

"Calcium arsenate may be used either as a dust or spray and in either form is effective," says C. H. Hammond, entomologist at the North Carolina State college. "When this poison is used as a dust it is usually applied somewhere in the early morning when the dew is present and repeated at intervals of a week or ten days, or as often as is found necessary. Dusting machines are used for this purpose, but a cheap and effective one can be made by nailing a piece of screen wire over the bottom of a box and filling the box with the poison. Then by jarring the box the poison will sift through the screen wire."

Using as a Spray

To use calcium arsenate as a spray, three tablespoonfuls to one gallon of water are required. Add the poison to the water and stir thoroughly to keep it in suspension. Where only small amounts are required, the poison may be mixed with flour in the proportion of one pound of poison to fifteen pounds of flour. This mixture should be applied to the vines when they are wet with dew or rain.

Highly Concentrated Fertilizer Mixtures

Farmers have been using large amounts of the commercial concentrated fertilizer mixtures for many years, and their use has been increased. There is nothing objectionable now in the use of these fertilizers when they are used for the purpose for which they were intended. Many of these fertilizers have been so highly concentrated, since the World war, that it is impossible for many farmers to apply enough of them to the land to get the best results. Where only small amounts are required, the concentrated fertilizers are all right, but where large amounts are required, the concentration of the fertilizer makes it very difficult to get the proper amount of plant food on the land. This is especially true in the case of the fertilizers that are used for the production of corn and other grain crops.

Fertilizers are made up of three principal plant foods, nitrogen, phosphoric acid and potash. These plant foods are usually combined in the form of chemical salts. Nitrogen is usually combined with sodium to form nitrate of soda, with calcium to form calcium nitrate, with ammonia to form ammonium sulphate, and with other substances to form other nitrogen salts. Phosphoric acid is usually combined with calcium to form calcium phosphate, commonly called acid phosphate. Potash is usually combined with potassium to form potassium chloride, potassium sulphate, potassium nitrate and other potassium salts.

Fertilizers are usually mixed in the form of powders, and when they are mixed they tend to cake. This caking is caused by the moisture in the air coming in contact with the fertilizer. The caking can be prevented by keeping the fertilizer in a dry place. If the fertilizer has caked, it can be broken up by pounding it with a hammer or mallet. Caking can be prevented by mixing a small amount of lime with the fertilizer. Lime will absorb the moisture and prevent the fertilizer from caking. Lime is also beneficial to the soil, and it is a good plan to mix it with the fertilizer when it is applied to the soil.

Agricultural Hints

Oil is cheaper than bearings and other farm implement parts.

To save cutting glass to fit, use standard sash windows to all farm buildings.

Use wax to reduce the cost per bushel of corn or to produce more corn to the acre. It pays.

Planting twenty rows of corn in the corn belt instead of twelve made the yields bounce along well in the fall.

An attractive farm sign bears a duty to the farm entrance. Replace it when faded and unsightly from exposure to passersby.

A feeding-flat two weighing four pounds will empty four gallons of feed into twenty-five to thirty pounds of corn in a minute.

Trimming hoofs more often prevents the grain from escaping at the extremities and causing the animal to waste feed. Trimming also helps this condition to remove the pebbles from hoofs.

Square ears are undesirable given the same good qualities which they deserve. If you are growing squash or pumpkins, they, too, may be square in shape.

When planting, select trees for the planting job by tugging at the trees lightly. If the roots resist, firmly pack it in well-planted it is loosely planted.

Bone makes a good temporary pay crop for supplying the market today. An acre supplies only four to six pounds of meat and the pastime will carry 20 hogs for six weeks.

If birds are too large eggs may be thrown by two or more boys throwing little stones. Twelve to fourteen inches is suggested for the larger breeds, and ten to twelve inches for the smaller breeds.

Poison Necessary to Control Flea Beetle

Flea beetles are often very troublesome in potato fields. There are said to be a dozen species of these beetles, but each one can be classed and treated in the same general way. Hardwood ashes used liberally is often recommended as a preventive and applied by hand in some cases, but will not control the worms around now. Poison is necessary, and a light powder is preferred until arsenate to fit gallons of hardwood. For dusting, calcium arsenate was also found useful, though not as effective as when the liquid is properly applied, which means a spray covering underside as well as tops of leaves.

Walking "League of Nations"

Washington—What will the well-dressed business man wear this summer?

London and New York haberdashers have their own answer to that question; geography predicts how it will be the products of 20 foreign countries, more or less.

"If bright national labels were pasted on the pieces of merchandise wearing apparel wholly or partly of foreign origin, the well-dressed business man would look like a fund raised from a world tour of the best hotels," says a bulletin of the National Geographic society from the headquarters in Washington, D. C.

"From top to toe for the American, attired for the street, is a walking economic tribute of Nations.

"He may decline that his hat came from Denmark, his shirt and collar from Troy, N. Y.; the neckties from Paterson, N. J.; his coat and trousers from a local tailor who fashions his cloth from 'imported woolens' that have been shipped from Australia, Argentina, South Africa or the British West Indies, but more probably in Italy.

"His silk, the right summer vest of modish in Yorkshire and India's tidal flatlands gift to America, his spat chain taken from the foreign curio in his cuff link hides the shape and tastes buttons from Dresden or Limoges.

"The entangling alliances of this American's feet are indeed wonderful to contemplate. Four continents, at the very least, annually save millions of United States citizens from getting around barefoot.

"Now for a look in the business men's pocket. That fountain pen with a bright shine of exotic—is born of some friend. From a zone not as American row in all probability, but an Argentine one, because in Argentina there is a sizable demand for milk for final runs in the United States. Cereals for pens and similar objects is solidified milk. The gold of the pen point was a American—or it may be South African. The very paint of the pen, the part in writing with it not gold, but irridium most likely from one platinum mines of Perfect Russia—Fair resistance.

"The yellow pencil in the vest pocket can be sent to America, or Mexican graphite and gaudy colored to illustrate chosen cause, fashed to American or Argentine cattle hide, and bound with a carefully arranged tie from linen, pajamas or long set from fat on the tongue in China, or least gain from New Zealand bags.

"The piece of the pocket memo pad that to all American more pencilled to the pencil, and the tablets, of Australian tablets the quarter hours ran by. Some of indeed the team of Japanese now close at hand.

"There a fellow has been a policeman," proffered one. "I know the cut of them, in or out an serge, for all that has of nothing on but a trowel, chum."

"I see him," agreed Whitson. "I stumbled think he had been long out of uniform either. They go back to the neck very quick."

There was another silence.

"What's the time now, Nat twelve o'clock yet?"

"Four minutes more," said the old cat of the master mariners. "Those beggars are going to have their feast here. They're putting down their pig."

"My it is not," cried a new young chum suddenly. "That's no pig. It's a corpse."

The Japanese had paused, and set down their load. The man whom Whitson recognized as an expedition was unwrapping the leaves. Out of the wiper end of the bundle a hand showed long and pale.

What the magistrate warden said, on the start of the moment, is better left unreported. No magistrate-warden likes to see corpses, and especially to compass that are wrapped in leaves and carried by Asian headhunters, littering up his immediate district; and this far, Tatatara and really been immaculate a model to all districts and all fields. The vexed official was spluttering downward, with the intention of arresting the whole party and confiscating the corpse, when something happened that shocked him as if he had been pulled up by a rope.

The corpse was standing right on the edge of Tatara's statue. Before anyone could move to stop him, it was a live that was lying there, rushed across the fields and landed in the midst of the previous town toward Metropole, a with all his strength which did not seem to be great. Then he threw himself into the ground, lifted it, and drove it again, and again, and again, until he cleared his head and dirt holding the pole dried out long sufficient to make a small gulley in it.

Then the interpreting rods it was something else quite as foolish that we all adopt. Two years ago all the big farm in existence had movable rods. I know a boy who watched rods and tried for a year to make one himself and succeeded in exquisite paper from which he made a set. Advertisements in his wallet did his pocket, and Arrow collars and Ingersoll watches were the pride of the greenhorn in Grimsby every month. Then all of a sudden they were all gone, and the boy was left to something else and the simple rods were left to rust in the fields and the dampness.

It made the sense very with farmers Some one started the fashion of discarding perfectly good fencing and lighting in a direction that was over his neighbor and immediately every young fellow got into the swim.

We don't think so much for our selves, or for our children, or for our neighbors do. If Mrs. Brown has long skirts or feels her self to grow in her age we must have them all the neighbors follow in quick order. If Brown runs a lightning rod in his fine house, immediately all the children in the house, in the county are fitted instead with lightning rods.

The story is told that in the fair war a German private soldier was apprehended upon French territory and brought to the American commander of the post.

"Who are you?" the American said. "You have no business here. What's going to happen to you is not any of your affair. You're going to be locked up against the fence and shot."

"Ach," the German said, ready to sleep forever rods if that was the style, "Vatever you do vine."

LIGHTNING RODS

A Mistake

Architects, whom I admire chiefly because they have the knack of figuring out in advance just where the hot water pipes can go in every one of 200 apartments in a building, do make mistakes sometimes. I seen backstage at one of the newer and better theaters the other night to speak actress words with a comedian, and found him in a funny little coop of a dressing room. "Not much for a star, is it?" he said. "When they built the theater they didn't figure on dressing rooms, and found they had to put them in later."

for sixteen years, and one thing and nothing red may be a menace to safety rather than a protection if not properly adjusted. But I am mistaken; the lightning rod, and Nancy tells me she is going to attempt back again.

All through the farming district as I motored from Metropolis, as I found was the work of the lightning rod dispenser. Every home, every barn, every outbuilding, even wood shed to chicken roost, was bristling with copper rods, and every one carried on one fundamental.

I could guess that it all happened. Some silver-tongued canker trained in salesmanship, in the seventies or eighties, left the firearms and log and sold them the proposition: safety, protection. Probably the builder of 1870 were all to be gathered in the simple lexicography of the day, and they were the better. Some of Whitson's remarks about a ghost of Australian tobacco then visited the neighborhood, and that he had stopped in cigarette paper from Japanese now in use in Port Moresby, caused Whitson to remember his wallet and his pocket, and to produce a cigarette case. It was the case of the greenhorn in Grimsby every month. Then all of a sudden they were all gone, and the boy was left to something else and the simple rods were left to rust in the fields and the dampness.

It made the sense very with farmers Some one started the fashion of discarding perfectly good fencing and lighting in a direction that was over his neighbor and immediately every young fellow got into the swim.

We don't think so much for our selves, or for our children, or for our neighbors do. If Mrs. Brown has long skirts or feels her self to grow in her age we must have them all the neighbors follow in quick order. If Brown runs a lightning rod in his fine house, immediately all the children in the house, in the county are fitted instead with lightning rods.

The story is told that in the fair war a German private soldier was apprehended upon French territory and brought to the American commander of the post.

"Who are you?" the American said. "You have no business here. What's going to happen to you is not any of your affair. You're going to be locked up against the fence and shot."

"Ach," the German said, ready to sleep forever rods if that was the style, "Vatever you do vine."

PAJAMA COSTUMES ARE POPULAR; EVERY HAT IS A PRETTY THAT

Pleated Trouser Type of Pajama Costume.

NOW that the scope of wear-ableness for the pajama costume reaches beyond the boudoir and the beach, into almost every environment, designers are setting upon the theme as a center for their most intriguing and variegated ideas.

Just now it is the pleated trouser type which is making a battle for it-self in the pajama realm. The cunning outfits in the picture to the left of this page are especially adapted for sports and kitchenette wear this season. These pleated trousers which begin at the knees are quite extreme in appearance. Made of chalk, stripe, gingham and other smart washable weaves, pajama ensembles of the sort pictured are ideal for beach wear. They are also practically nothing the game of the tennis court upon type and its near relative.

In creating the outfit-ingenious in pajama costumes which have invaded the mode, fashionders make it a point to find a harmony that exists also in the fabrics their materials and their styling to environment and event. For instance, one would naturally expect beach pajamas and those worn by enthusiastic sailor lassies, to take on a nautical aspect. Which they do, as in the case of a clever outfit the coat of which goes navy twill as to color and motif in that a very important looking insignia is embroidered on one arm within three spreads on the front and fitted cap carries both. ing, as I did. Ick, in spite of my better self against the pricks of prison life, it was something like fun going forward, four more years stood—since we had left the outskirts of Port Moresby allowances would never restrain my acutenment and felt, not for the first of pay, would be compliance. But I would, and did, save my self respect by telling myself that it was not as if I were a free man, and remember I might be more respected. This next month, next year, I should have almost surely settled into my life at last, taken up land, or found some work to do which could learn, set out to cover the long, long road to the life and freedom. Then I would take the bottles, making sure that there was no one about, and fling them into the sea. I would not, indeed, keep them for my self, but I would throw them as far as I could, and watch them sink.

Then the sun went down, and I was still there, and I was still drinking. I had been long out of sight of land, and I had not seen a human face for hours. I was quite alone, and I was drunk.

I do not remember what happened after that. I remember that I was sitting on the deck, with my back against the bulwarks, and that I was singing. I remember that I was singing a song that I had learned in my childhood, and that I was singing it very loudly and very badly. I remember that I was singing it to the tune of "Yankee Doodle," and that I was singing it to the words of "Rule Britannia." I remember that I was singing it to the tune of "God Save the King," and that I was singing it to the tune of "The Star-Spangled Banner." I remember that I was singing it to the tune of "The Marseillaise," and that I was singing it to the tune of "The Internationale." I remember that I was singing it to the tune of "The Red Flag," and that I was singing it to the tune of "The Wearing of the Green." I remember that I was singing it to the tune of "The Harp That Once Through Tara's Halls," and that I was singing it to the tune of "The Minstrel Boy." I remember that I was singing it to the tune of "The Last Rose of Summer," and that I was singing it to the tune of "The Meeting of the Waters

The Pioneer Sunday School Work of Charlevoix.

At the recent fiftieth celebration of the anniversary of the organization of Sunday schools by the M. E. churches, a fifth person is noted as having been present at the first meeting of the Sunday School society in Charlevoix.

The first Sunday school was organized in the Methodist church in 1880, and Mr. Hosmer, as one person, a boy of fifteen years of age, was the only member present. Mr. Hosmer was the superintendent, and again in the capacity of teacher. The school met in the afternoon, and the lessons were the regular lessons of the day.

Our St. James Correspondence

Mr. Editor: Some of the natives in the Mid Lake country will think this letter and heading to the official note, as well as somewhat timid and modest—some will say a good deal of assurance that our neighbors of the Grand Traverse Pilot Bend have all along thereto related being good and quite large enough for the first Sunday Sabbaths or the place.

I am authorized to offer you a hearty and cordial welcome to our neighborhood, and to say that we are one and you may depend upon it that the Pilot Bee from it showing will be heard and welcomed with one of extreme pleasure and satisfaction. As an evidence of their desire and determination to labor earnestly for the good of the cause, they have already subscribed for the paper, and the money is now in the hands of the agent for the same. Mr. Dow is expected to be with us in a few days, when he will receive the names of all others who may desire to subscribe.

Mr. Dow will also be expected to preach for us on the Sabbath, and we hope to see a large congregation out to hear him. Yours truly,

Our Genial Tramp Repairs His Liberty Yesterday Morning

Our genial tramp has enjoyed the liberty of the village for the past week, and on more than one occasion has been seen to enter the store of Fred Pinney, and from the way he would help himself to anything he saw, and from the manner in which he would walk around, it was evident that he was at home. Yesterday morning, however, he was missing, and it was found that he had skipped out. He left behind him a pair of pants, which he had borrowed from Mr. Pinney, and which were a little too short for him. AMERICANS AS SPENDERS

Economy seems due to swell no less than evil in the "normal" days of the prosperous American. He (for on the rich he more than the spend-thrift) is the mainstay of the normal American, although the American normal business is thought to exceed the most extravagant of peoples.

It is interesting to note therefore that the leaders of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States are taking up the problem of economy, in the interest, they say, of the welfare of the nation. Of course, the economy they urge is not personal economy, but governmental economy. It is not economy in the matter of relief, or of the war effort, but economy in the matter of the ordinary running costs of the government.

Of the $14.6 billion the last year for which there is definite figure, the American people paid $8.5 billion in taxes. The remainder was borrowed. The Chamber of Commerce of the United States proposes that the people be taxed to the limit of their ability to pay, and that every penny possible be borrowed. Then, when the war is over, the people will be burdened with a debt so great that they will be forced to practice economy in order to pay the interest charges.

Is that the way to run a country? Is that the way to run a business? Is that the way to run a household? Is that the way you run your own personal affairs?

Of course not. Then why should the government be run that way?

PROTECTION AND PRICES

It will be remembered that when the present tariff act was under consideration in 1941, the claim was made (and, no doubt, honestly made) that the increased duties would result in increased prices to the consumer, with the result that the loss in revenue from lower imports would be more than offset by the increased revenue from higher duties. The claim was made that the new tariff would not affect the cost of living to any appreciable degree.

The new tariff law will not undoubtedly increase the cost of living but it will improve the bookkeeping status of making a living by assuring a larger "cut" of consumers' purchases and trade in American dollars.

Since 1931, the Michigan Bell Telephone Company has been required to pay the following amounts in taxes:

1932	$1,000,000
1934	1,000,000

WIDE RIBBON SASH IS BACK; BEACH MILLINERY NEW TOPIC

GRACEFUL fashion and comfort go hand in hand this year, and the result is stylish, wide ribbon sashes that tie the waistline so that it looks about three years' grandmother's head size or to an extreme from modern Lucille Duffy —suppose an exaggeration of style to be at least very moderate.

Yesterday, indeed, we were tempted to the smaller sizes for inspection, to actually attain a style ideal, but, Perhaps it would be more sensible to say that there is no limit when it comes to picturesque fashion.

A Love of a Frock

Dainty wearing apparel for the beach has been the result of much study. Wet, the new beach dress must be as attractive as the one worn on the boulevard. While pulling does not agree with many of the materials used for the latter, the opposite is true of the bathing suit model. Many of the new beach dresses are made of jersey, which is not only becoming but is perfectly adapted to swimming needs, withstanding water and sun without fading. Two-piece models are very popular, and the skirt may be of a contrasting color.

For Wear at the Beach.

Beach sportswear promises a new fashion in accessories to do and to those who possess, in spite of the hard times in the north as to finish an ensemble. Of course, there is much to be said for the simple, tailored finish. Perhaps it would be more sensible to say that there is no limit when it comes to picturesque fashion.

What They Wear on the Beach.

Illustrated, fits into the scheme of things complete and lovely most possibly. Perhaps, however, to show that the narrower ribbon is preferred maybe we mention in passing colors, they were brought about the wide sashes to the side front where it overlaps belt for some odd sentiment, perhaps caught with a pretty pin. Flowered Bolton poplins of chiffon or Slovenly are greatly enhanced with the running sashes and ribbon belts now so popular. The brighter sashes are mostly of very soft soft satin or taffeta ribbon. Two-toned satin sashes, all to child on one side and turquoise blue or

Lone "Ace" Saved King's Throne

Lying—If there is an exception these days to the rule that "figures don't lie," it is found in the realm of aviation. Statistics, they have it, say that of American Marine Corps aces, one-seventh were killed in action, one-seventh were killed in accidents, one-seventh were wounded, and one-seventh were captured. Only one-seventh survived unscathed. Yet, as a matter of fact, the French army, which had more aviators than any other army, had only one ace killed in action for every five killed in accidents. Or, for every ace killed in action, four were killed in accidents.

It is true that the French army had a large number of aces, but the ratio of accidents to deaths in action was also large. The explanation is that the French aviators were constantly flying, and flying low, while the Americans were flying high, and were not in the air as much as the French. Also, the French aviators were constantly attacking, while the Americans were on the defensive most of the time.

Let Vast Riches Slip Through Fingers

London.—"It's all in the game."

It is that humble sentence was expressed the feeling probably of a man who, since was born beyond all the dreams of avarice and who died those in comfort and hardly possessed in a modest section of the Transvaal. Nearly half a century ago the name of Samuel Hemphill was famous throughout the world. He was a prospector who, prospecting after almost every one else, gained the reputation of being a lucky man. Right and left of him rose mines of fabulous wealth, but he was content to stick to his claim and work it in his own way.

Found Wreck of Frigate.

Hemphill found many of the things of material interest and many more, but he never made a big strike. He was getting near to "the big thing" at last when he died. He left behind him a few hundred pounds, but for the rest nothing. Nevertheless, he had the satisfaction of knowing that he had made a name for himself in the world of which he had been more interested.

It was hardly fifty years ago that Hemphill was a young man. He was born in Bristol, England, and went to the Transvaal when he was twenty-one. He was a man of strong character and of a dreamy disposition. He was not a man of business. He was a man of dreams. He was a man of visions. He was a man of hopes. He was a man of fears. OUR TRAMP!

Recaptured, But Effects a Second Escape, and is Gobbled Up Again

The most notable piece of excitement we have had in Charlevoix for many months occurred on Monday morning, the so-called Frank Fuller, a hard looking fellow who had been in town for a few days and had made other changes to relieve monotony, the funky vagrant. Under-Sheriff B. W. Mills, who had been on the watch and end of how thoroughly Sheriff Joel Mercer, and on Monday evening, after consultation with certain members of the council of the forces, grounds, and obtained home.

Mr. Iles, who lives some distance back of the Waterhouse, on the evening, and found a strange looking person standing at his gate. He recognized him as a tramp and drawing his revolver demanded his surrender. Seeing that his master, he gave himself up, and allowed to S. G. Ingham, of Smith Arm, Mr. Ben straight to this village. Sheriff Conner took possession of him, and with Under-Sheriff Mills, experience with this person previous, by comparison again, on Tuesday morning of the entire village, handcuffed, shackled and chains. The last was not required, for Mr. Conner had gagged a force of carpenters and commenced plastering up the upper portion of the building, which had been left in a very unfinished condition since being given a receiving and fair play, but Billy was too hard-hearted to comply with his request. He was confined for considerable time attempting an escape, and Under-Sheriff Miller put a curtain around him so he can not find the handcuffs on. At home of us found the confectionery before or the attractions which may be had on the town, hence unemployed.

A Playhouse.—It seems a long time ago that we spoke of the project of building a playhouse for the use of the children, but it is not too late to commence the work now, and we hope that some one will take the matter in hand and push it to completion before the season is over.

The Masonic Address.—The address of Master Gates at the dedication of the Masonic hall on Thursday evening was a very able production, and we regret that we have not room for it in full. We hope to be able to publish it next week.

Director Frank Tuttle has made the most of the opportunities for comedy in the story, which is based on the old saying that "Know All Will" is Full Knowledge."

Jack Holt plays the part of Jack Hamilton, a young man who knows little about anything but thinks he knows everything. Ralph Graves is Jack's friend, who tries to help him, but Jack refuses to be helped. Lila Lee is the girl who loves Jack, and who finally succeeds in bringing him to his senses.

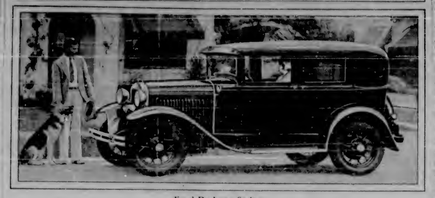
Ford Offers New De Luxe Sedan



Ford De Luxe Sedan

The De Luxe Sedan, recently added to the Ford line, is designed by those who desire distinctiveness and unusual comfort in an automobile. The interior is inviting and roomy with wide doors to ease passengers. Absence of rear quarter windows gives the car a striking individuality and affords privacy to the occupants.

Interior trimmings and appointments are luxurious. Upholstery is either in broken mohair or a deep tan Bedford cord pattern to match the exterior finish.

Other refinements include arm rests for the rear seat, manually-operated garnish mouldings on the windows and beneath the windshield, flexible robe rail and hard wave in an attractive pattern.

The front seat is adjustable within a range of four inches to suit the convenience and comfort of the driver. It is moved quickly and easily by a small, inconspicuous handle in the front center of the seat just above the floor.

The De Luxe Sedan, like other Ford body types, can be obtained in any one of several color combinations.

WOMEN SERVING IN SOLDIER GARB

Many U. S. Wars Have Seen Women Fighting as Men

Recently there came to light in Kansas evidence to indicate that in a Kansas regiment during the Civil war was a woman serving as a soldier in a man's clothes. Surprising as was this information, her case was not unique for it has been estimated that during that conflict upwards of 400 women chose garbed themselves and marched away to battle. Nor was the Civil war the only one of our wars in which such things took place, for similar cases are recorded in the Revolution and the war with Mexico.

In this issue of The Sentinel appears an illustrated feature article by Ross Scott Waldon which tells about "Some American Women Warriors." Be sure to read it. You'll find it interesting.

AUTOMOBILES IN COLLISION

EIGHT INJURED—ONE SERIOUSLY—MACHINE A WRECK

The first serious automobile accident of the season in which local people in rural territory were injured occurred Friday afternoon, July 4th, when a machine driven by Vernon Gamble collided with a heavier car driven by Walter Taylor, four of them from the heavier car and crashed into a fence by the roadside and was completely wrecked, and Vernon Gamble seriously injured, while his companion, Miss Ruth Hastings of Petoskey, escaped with a few minor cuts and bruises. Young Gamble was rushed to the local hospital for surgical treatment where it was found that his skull was fractured and that cuts and bruises were none the worst injury being the skull fracture.

In the car with Mr. Taylor were Mr. and Mrs. R. S. Shapero, Mrs. Walter Taylor and son, Walter, of Virginia and Elaine all of whom were more or less cut up but received no injuries of a serious nature. First aid treatment was given and the several members of the Taylor-Shapero party motored to their homes.

That the accident was quickly accomplished is evidently by the report of Walter Taylor who says that it started and was over before he had time to see how it all happened.

From other sources there is evidence that the smash was upon the roadster, driven by young Gamble who was moving at high speed as it swung around the curve on U. S. 31 at the P. M. R. R. crossing near the John Martin farm, and that it swung out when it hit the R. R. crossing, where the driver evidently lost control of the machine. An instant later, came the double crash, first when it collided with the heavier machine and then the nearby guard railing and heavy posts reducing the roadster to a mass of wreckage and causing the injury of Gamble and Miss Hastings.

One seriously so, and considerable damage to the larger car.

"PARIS" PRESENTS AN ANGLO-FRENCH ENTENTE CORDIALE

"Paris," which comes to the Palace Theatre next week, not only brings Irene Bordoni, the favorite Parisite, to the screen for the first time, but also marks the initial appearance on the talking picture sheet of her leading man, Jack Buchanan.

Buchanan is the idol of the British musical comedy stage. He has also been starred in New York in Charlot's Revues. He was chosen to play opposite Miss Bordoni because she was a continental favorite, and Buchanan is the outstanding star in that field. He is, in fact, the perfect type for the role.

When "Paris" was being cast, Buchanan was just finishing a six-teen months' run of a successful musical comedy in London. He received the cable asking him to join the Bordoni cast, and left the next day, making the journey in Hollywood from England in less than three weeks.

"Paris" is the screen version of Miss Bordoni's latest and greatest stage success. It is a First National and Vitaphone production, replete with singing and dancing, and presents the French star in a typical Bordoni role—that of a French stage star.

AN EXHIBIT AT CALLENS STUDIO

Work of Lansing Artists—Some Pictures Beaver Island Scenes

The Barron Callen Studio announces for their first exhibition of the season the paintings of Mr. Clifford L. Warner and J. I. Quisinsky, both of Lansing, Michigan.

Clifford L. Warner has been drawing and painting pictures ever since he can remember. He began painting pictures, as most children do, just to amuse themselves. Next it became a hobby with him. Then he became serious about painting and became a student at the Chicago Art Institute, where he took a general academic course in drawing and painting. Now he has made it his life work and has established a studio in Lansing, 107 E. Grand River Ave.

Besides the countryside surrounding Lansing, some Florida scenes and a number from Beaver Island are among the Warner collection.

Mr. Quisinsky was born in England and belongs to the well known firm of Quisinsky and Sons of Lansing, Mich. He is the executive Vice Pres. of the Lansing Art Club. He has exhibited in the Lansing and Detroit shows and very largely in England.

He has chosen to picture Lansing and Beaver Island landscapes. The exhibition is unique in that the paintings are all small and are framed in hand carved frames of Mr. Warner's own design.

ABORTION IN CATTLE TO BE DISCUSSED

Dr. B. J. Killham to Address Cheboygan County Dairymen

Contagious Abortion in Michigan according to latest reports, annually causes a toll of $5,000,000 on the dairy industry of Michigan. At the present time many local dairymen are highly suspicious that this disease is causing considerable loss in our own herds.

Dr. B. J. Killham, formerly in charge of the State Tuberculosis Eradication Campaign has been appointed as Extension Specialist with the problem of working out methods for the control of contagious Abortion in cattle.

All dairymen will note with considerable interest the announcement that plans have been completed with Dr. B. J. Killham to spend Wednesday, July 16th, in Cheboygan County, to be the main speakers at two meetings for the purpose of discussing this Contagious Abortion. The first meeting will be held in the Farmers' Co-op Creamery at Mackinaw City Wednesday afternoon, July 16th, beginning promptly at 2:00 o'clock fast time. The second will be at the P. Hall, East Jordan, at 8 o'clock fast time, on Wednesday night, July 16th.

No modifiers is known which will entirely check Abortion in cattle, but the serious losses in Michigan herds have led many owners to purchase bulls which are advertised to cure. The owner not only loses the money paid out, but many times loses valuable time, which could be utilized to clean up his herd with proper control measures.

The known methods of control are to make frequent tests of suspected herds to find which animals are affected, the isolation of diseased cattle, and the proper sanitary methods in the dairy farm.

Constant research work at the Michigan Station and other stations, besides in the laboratories of the U. S. Dept. of Agri, is being carried on to find other or better control measures.

Dairymen, this is your first opportunity to learn the known facts concerning contagious abortion from a recognized authority. Don't fail to remember the date of July 16th, and attend your nearest meeting.

"Frugality Makes a Poor Man Rich"

Seneca, the philospher of olden times, had the right idea—whether or not he practiced it is another question.

Frugality, economy, saving, will indeed raise the poor man to reasonable comfort.

Even though you may not be poor (probably are not), still you will go much farther if you save prominently, for it isn't the amount you save that counts so much as the persistence with which you save.

KELLY STOCK CO. OPENSMONDAY

Players Will Offer Week of Comedy and Drama

About this time of the year residents of Charlevoix and vicinity look for a visit from the Kelly players. This organization headed by Bill Kelly, will open a week's engagement in Charlevoix commencing Monday, July 14th, in the big theatre.

No doubt many of the play-goers of this vicinity who are familiar with the names of the latest stage successes will recognize some of the titles in the line up of plays.

Monday night's play, "The IT Girl," is a comedy drama of New York suburban life. An ambitious mother trying to break into society and finding her carefully-laid plans thwarted by the unexpected arrival of a poor relative, schemes and plans to foil the unexpected guest, takes a hand at scheming and planning also, and the play comes to a happy ending and to an unexpected reunion.

Tuesday night's play, "Mary's Other Husband," Larry Johnson's successful play which ran several months on Broadway will be the midweek feature comedy. "Traitor, Beggars and Bash"—"Give Us Awakened," "Marrying for Money" and "The Only Road," are other plays that will be presented during the week.

A feature of the show this year will be the excellent standard of vaudeville to be presented between the acts, says Mr. Kelly. Singing, dancing, comedy and magic.

JAZZ ERA NOT SELF-SUPPORTING

Broadway, the most renowned Gay White Way in the world, doesn't even support its own appetite for jazz, sensation and sexy shows, Channing Pollock, author of "The Enemy," "The Fool," and a host of other serious and clean plays, declares in an article in the current American Magazine.

Outside of New York, in the far reaches of the country, in the stable public, the backbone of the American nation, which supports good plays, good books and the same mode of living that is traditional with America, the playwright says, That class, he adds, will always be in the majority. Sensational-mad city dwellers cannot support the many institutions that brand America as decadent.

"There are more lights in library windows than there are on Broadway. You may go to a score of theatres, but they are there," Pollock continues. "The city newspapers may be ratalogues of crime and the country may be dotted with night clubs. But men and women get married and the majority of them stay married. Flaming youth makes controversy and the football team it achieves parenthood and normal, healthy children."

Pollock cites the past year in the theatres of New York. The year began, he says, with an inundation of sex and murder plays, at the apex of what is known as the jazz age. Before Christmas, all but one of those truck gardens had disappeared and Easter found the New York stage without a single onetime that did not deserve it. Reviewing plays of the last decade, he finds that not a single lasting success was built on sex or crime in plays. Even the light comedies were those without objectionable lines. Twenty-eight plays that ran 800 nights or more appealed to the supposedly archaic instincts of sentiment, loyalty, or pity.

"There may be a rash on the face of civilization," Pollock concludes, "but its heart is still beating vigorously, and its feet are still marching on and up."

GIVE PLANT FOOD TO STRAWBERRIES

Fertilizer Should Be Placed Close to the Plant.

During the fruiting season strawberries need an abundance of readily available plant food close to the plant as the roots do not extend much beyond the spread of the leaves. Furthermore, where commercial fertilizer is used, it should be applied on the surface and carefully worked into the soil so as not to destroy the roots. Strawberry roots are very fine and come close to the surface and if broken by plow or cultivator there is danger of loosing and injury to the plants.

The strawberry bed should be worked out in August and fertilized with about 800 pounds per acre of an 8-4-4 fertilizer so as to promote plant growth and strong fruit crowns during the fall months. Where plants are set in November in three foot rows, 600 to 800 pounds of fertilizer should have been applied in the row and well worked into the soil before setting the plants.

Early in the spring as soon as your plants show signs of blooming, fertilize again, using 400 pounds per acre of a fertilizer analyzing about 4 per cent nitrogen, 4 per cent phosphoric acid and 4 per cent potash. More potash is needed during the bearing period to color the berries. If you have an 8-4-4 fertilizer on hand, if you will add 10 pounds of muriate of potash—or 10 pounds of sulphate of potash would be better if you can get it—to every 100 pounds of your 8-4-4 fertilizer, this will answer fairly well—only be careful to mix it in thoroughly. To do this, pile your fertilizer on a tight floor (or the ground, on top, then turn it over side and shovel over into a new pile, putting each shovelful on top of the pile. Now repeat this operation (turning three times in all altogether—and your fertilizer is ready for use.

The use of the word "to" means to use 10 per cent more fertilizer

Many Leaves Will Make Big Apples and Pears

Dr. J. H. Shaw of the United States Department of Agriculture reported at the Fruit Growers' conference held at Medford, Ore., the extremely interesting results of an experiment which was carried on with the Washington apple orchard, showing that under normal conditions the number of leaves per fruit is the most important factor determining the size and quality of apples and pears. The striking effect upon the size of Hubbard pears was shown by the fact that when an average of only 50 leaves for each pear were left on a tree, the fruit averaged 220 to a box. With 70 leaves per fruit the average was 185 per box, with 90 leaves 158, and with 50 leaves 105 per box. About 60 leaves per fruit with fruit averaging 3 inches in diameter the best size of Anjou.

These plenty of leaves are of such prime importance in manufacturing fruit of the best size and quality, Doctor Magness pointed out, the necessity of promoting in the spring the growth of wood, upon which the spurs are so directly dependent.

Spray for Peaches

Peach growers should spray their trees for curl-leaf whether the fruit buds are alive or not, because a severe attack of curl-leaf weakens the trees. When a considerable percentage of the peach buds have been winter-killed it is best to prune only very lightly or not at all. Pruning such trees may mean cutting down the yield. When all the buds are dead it may be a good opportunity to prune the trees by heading them back.

Remove Residue

The grower can always clean or remove the residue from his fruit and generally at small expense. In the case of apple worms and diseases such as scab and blotch, affecting the fruit at harvest time, there is nothing that the grower can do about it. He may back up the spades and say: "Well, it is too bad. They are worms, scabby and blotched." The result is a greatly reduced price or a total loss on a large portion of the fruit crop.

Woman Breaks Through Prison Walls

Auburn, N. Y.—Cat Eye Annie Lillian, Midwest—forty-eight-pound burglar and one of the most elusive characters of the underworld when on the prison walls, escaped from the Auburn women's prison, but officials authorities are doing their best to nab her up again. Just three weeks after shedding to try for freedom with two other inmates who were captured, Annie sewed her way out of her cell and escaped.

Cat Eye, who got her nickname from a peculiar cast to one eye, sawed through the wood section of the bolt in her cell door and got over the wall on a rope which left officials puzzled several hours afterward.

Only a few clues are also told Warden Lewis L. Lawes this week. Jesse Richards, blond bandit of Hot Springs and Annie Bannon, burglar girl of Brooklyn, apparently left to get her to join them in their contemplated escape of April 29. Mystified as the time by this revelation, and puzzled that Cat Eye had "never been the opportunistic prison officials were not inclined to consider at this time. Annie is now in a dome to play her 10 years and more.

At first it was believed that she might still be within the walls, but extended search of every nook and corner failed to reveal her. Instead, only the head was found outside the walls by trappers and police thoroughly on the vicinity. Cities throughout the state were asked to be on the lookout for her.

On a previous escape, after 20 hours of freedom, she was found rain-soaked and exhausted, hidden under a pile of straw a mile and a half east of Weedsport, eight miles north of Auburn.

A clew to her whereabouts was furnished in that connection in view of restrictions in that vicinity who said they had seen a woman near there acting strangely. She had gone without food for a period of 24 hours.

Being one has said that the chief value of education is to help one to meet the shock of readjustment to a new environment. Some give up the old pleasantly and well, others adjust themselves to the new environment slowly and painfully, while a few never adjust themselves to whatever comes next.

Mr. Life brings to many of us quick changes, sudden calls for an absolutely new coloring of daily life. It is the new and large man who can make these readjustments without wrecking his life or ruining his happiness.

I have noticed that when men who have specialized or pinned their faith to one thing suddenly encounter an experience for circumstances in change they usually unexpectedly go after the regular routine which, under this encouragement, of these are quickly.

Recently I had been a partner all his life and who had made some money, moving to a new city, was so determined to take his case. Having sold his business there was left no reason for him to do so and could stay late in the afternoon. He could go home as soon as dinner was over. Nobody would be home, no business or favorite would be interfered with. He was miserable, as could not make the readjustment. He couldn't get the work for a few years and then became comfortable business and settled happily back into the old routine. That he did done as I am sure life would be, in some ended for him.

Another is much more adjustable. He stress a new condition arouses curiosity or emotional disturbance. Neither a happiness is not easier. His daughter was a young girl upon whom his affections were centered and whom he expected to marry. The girl for a time maintained the same viewpoint. But women's minds are subject to change, and Sophie's fancies ran into another turn more to her liking. Now she have Sophie the gate on to speak, and marries the other man. Was he perturbed? Did he grow pale and start down the road? Not he. The girl was, of course, a loss, but new prospects opened up a chance for readjustment. The newly married couple would have to live somewhere. Sophie had just the house and the furniture which would be perfect for them. He hied him at once to his rival and sold him a cozy little attic in the girl's name. In a new addition which he had just opened up. He had had the foresight to have put over a good mattress deal as an ob-

THE FRENCH PROTEST

The hysterical outcry which has arisen in France over a three per cent increase in the American tariff on her exports, in appeal of that be reasonable and supposedly which had characterized in general foreign protests against the recent tariff increase.

French tariffs and other foreign trade rules Americans usually find more severe than ours against French imports. Those rulers are the French governments appointed by those who, of course, is the supreme power in the country. Their effort was backed only by the administrative machinery and the political programs that they would withdraw from France, discharging several hundred officials, and to the bottom of the continent whose patronage depended on the goodwill of the Americans. Even the French reference is made to American imports, which have long been considered, was the increase over the Fordney-McCumber rate of 1922, which ranged on three-quarters of the French total of imports. The same duties in general, with the new tariff law, increased by 30 per cent. The increase in existing duties established with the new tariff law, however, was in the long run, in existing duties, which resulted

SOME AMERICAN WOMEN WARRIORS

"Michigan Bridget" Carrying the Flag

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

ASSOCIATED with one of a dozen war women of the Revolutionary period whose memory is being perpetuated by the Daughters of the American Revolution, a prominent attorney of Washington, D. C., has just received an inquiry from a Nebraska woman who was heralding to town the fact that she was the first child born in two years in the Platte Kansas region. Indians and other savages had not driven every last settler from the fertile valley, but stealth in a quiet way was a sign of a settler moving here as a soldier of the Four Movements, known as Young Nate Thurston, put it, April 20, 1860, which date I quote.

The records of the Daughters of the American Revolution reveal that in the historical patriotism. After many generations of women have been working for these who were performing the task for capital, their own ancestors, usually a long time had been forgotten. Then some patriotic woman or organization would undertake to find the records and prove descent. Such a woman was Mrs. Belle Hagaman Kinney, of Kansas, who became a member of Capt. George Weeks' company, Col. Israel Shreve's regiment, New Jersey troops, commissioned by Colonel Shepard of Westfield, and later by Col. Henry Jackson of Boston—the Fourth Massachusetts.

During a fight between her regiment and a party of Tory refugees Weeks was twice wounded—in the head and in the thigh. A surgeon, while examining the lead wound was impressed with the apparent weakness of his patient. His attempt to investigate the cause of blood in one boot was repulsed by his patient.

Not until later did the surgeon utter a stifled probe which had been performed by his patient. Deborah Sampson, known on the muster rolls and in her companions in arms as Robert Shurtleff. With the instrument the two armies she later removed from her groin a bullet and then proceeded to a name the owner of her sex.

Interesting women lived in the affairs of her soldier. She rejoined her company was again wounded, this time in one shoulder, but went again undaunted to the front. It is in this incident for which she is famous and which is preserved in many histories of the Revolution. After she had been in the service for a year and a half, she was taken sick with fever and was carried to a hospital in Philadelphia, and was discovered.

After the Revolution Molly lived for some years in the old Dutch family in Hopkinton where she married another veteran of the Revolution, George McKenly or McKinley. Both names are common in the various ancestors as are her 2d children names Lydia and Hiby. The date of the marriage is given with the date of her birth, to be exact. One account says she died in January, 1838, but the Lexington monument, which gives the birth as October 13, 1761 (instead of 1758 as the New Jersey records show) gives the date of her death as January 5, 1825.

The other famous study of the Revolution was Margaret Corbin, the Pennsylvania heroine of Fort Washington on November 16, 1776. She momentarily turned over, took the ramrod from the hand of her wounded husband, John Corbin, until she was severely wounded when a charge of grape shot tore off her left breast and left shoulder. She was taken prisoner with the garrison when Fort Lee was evacuated. She was paroled to General Greene at Fort Lee and later was sent on to Philadelphia with the wounded.

Margaret was the only woman of the garrison, as she was known by the soldiers in the Continental army, who was named in pensions in 1781 to his benefit or exemption of the Revolutionary soldiers. She applied for a pension of Deborah Sampson's service in the Continental army. She did her love to restore it but on this date did.

Although as interesting as the women, soldiers and sailors of the world wars in many ways are those women who fought shoulder to shoulder with their husbands or fiancés or sat at their bedsides. Some of them have become part of our national tradition, certainly such is the case with the soldier's wife, Molly Pitcher, of the battle of Monmouth fame. During the years since her heroic deeds there has been a regular race between rival Molly (as it is difficult to be sure of all the facts about her, Mary, Polly and Sally) due to the fact that the 'A' often confused with someone else. Of investigators in Carlisle, Pa., where she was whipped, Mrs. Hannah Lemon, Mrs. Molly Pitcher's real name was Mary Ludwig, and that she was born in Trenton, New Jersey, on November 13, 1754. Where she was when fourteen years old she married John Casper, son of a physician in Carlisle, Pa., happened to be the daughter of a Dutch family, which had its full share of grief. There she met John Casper Hays, a barber, and they were married in 1768.

At the outbreak of the Revolution Hays enlisted in Capt. Francis Proctor's (subsequently Artillery company, and his wife followed away to war with him. His enlistment expired December 1, 1776, and it is said that Mary Hays urged him to re-enlist, which he did—this time in the New Jersey Pennsylvania regiment of the line, commanded by the famous General Anthony Wayne. Again his wife seems to have been a welcome addition to the regiment, for she not only cared for her husband's clothes and cooked for him, but she also performed valuable services for his comrades. On a blazing July day in 1778 the battle of Monmouth was fought. It was so hot that many of the soldiers on both sides dropped dead from the heat. All during the battle Mary Hays was busy carrying water to the soldiers in her husband's regiment. The well when she filled his pitcher may still be seen near Tarrytown, N. Y., and his wife says that dog was for her from the history and daring, always doing good service as a soldier. She was of very little combined size was 62-50, and with her husband she formed a regiment of the regular army stationed on the field."

The Kidnaping of Howard Bettington

Bettington as he strode his way northward from Gloucester, felt a sense of happiness to that he had escaped himself of all the Lewis family from his monetary troubles. The election he made—which would afterward be transferred to his old cronies—were the best he had ever done. He was pleased who was voluntarily a land rattle. "This," he cried, as he was the best of a sturdy and rock, "will my Mary's tuition and board for a year."

He was perched upon a little island of rock, some three miles from Blackport. His enthusiasm led him to overtook the glare of a coming storm, the worst storm which late August ever brought to the Maine coast.

With the first puff of that fearful storm's great wave, like a tidal bore, rolled in and overwhelmed the rock. Lady sailing to his great strength as a swimmer was Bettington able to save himself.

With the storm came an awful dark ness which presently merged into night and left Bettington drenched and weary, trying to make his ways to the village. It was evident that he would not get back to his hotel in time to dress for dinner. He would start at daybreak and walk to Blackport, where he could get a train to Boston. Then he would go home after to Mary.

"I will have Lottie I would buy you a new dress," he said to himself, "but it seems too far a cost of an Easter bonnet. Let me see, I have—"

Mr. Gilkinson," she cried, "I must hasten it. It is one of those things you need to be tried. How can I get a dress for Easter?"

"Suppose you make it yourself," he suggested.

"Suppose," she cried, "I may possibly do that. I will see what I can do."

"Then," he said, "I will see you again."

"Yes," she answered, "I will see you again."

He looked at her curiously as she went from the room. She was inspiring to Washington society, found the dis pensable to young men in his office, his name, prominence and promise.

From the beginning the meetings was unhappy. He had found that the female discovered in a political rival some not to be liked done in an era when women were powers. He had gone back to the financing in New York. Boston Hadway was a splendid fellow. She was beautiful and was clever. The Hadway dinner par ties were extraordinarily famous. He was bound to admit that she had been a great asset to him.

It was at a dinner party that he an endowed his intention of taking a month's vacation. There were no guests some foreign financiers.

He knew that his wife carried what he was going. He had never been able, wisely, to see the genius of those extraordinarily famous dinners. He was unfamiliar with the ingredients that went to compose such successful affairs. He had always been content to eat them and let himself be amused by the results.

"Where," said the president of a Paris banking house, "that you work your wife watching women, but I never believe that. No, no. It's what you call 'pull,' eh?"

"In making a monetary call a wife may sometimes be helpful," said Hadway, "but I have found that the best way to deal with financiers is to be a well-mannered man who conducts his own company in any affairs."

There was an increase in his knowledge that he was not a financier. He was confident in the finals against it. He was not a financier. He was not a banker. He was not a speculator. He was not a financier. He was not a banker. He was not a speculator. He was not a financier. He was not a banker. He was not a speculator

Rev. N. Eastwood and family, and R. C. Pavel and family, of Crown Point, Ind., A. F. Mathes and family of Portland, Mich., W. G. Mather, of Detroit, Theodore Nees, of Albany, are registered at the Belvedere House, and will remain during the heated season.

Just stop and think a minute. Eleven years ago Charlevoix had a dozen houses, one store and 12x24 schoolhouse. Two mails a week, carried by a crippled Indian with a strap over his forehead, correspondence with our trade in "God knows." One small tug constituted our steam fleet, and row and sail boats were the only facilities for travel between Charlevoix and upland points. Small sail boats, could by dint of hard labor, pass from Lake Michigan into the harbor, and on the event of a forty rowd scow—the old Mendota—coming through over the bar, our people carried on in a manner to rival a good deal Fourth of July celebration. We looked forward to a government appropriation for the harbor as the acme of our fondest hopes, and for a time was fed fifty hope. When the state granted seven sections of swamp land for the improvement of Pine River, we were in rhapsody. Our days of dredging with a hoop and scraper were nearly over, and we rejoiced.

Look upon that picture and then upon this! Have any changes taken place? Can the most ambitious complain of our progress within the past decade? Four-mail routes center at Charlevoix and a number of daily and hop about from here from Chicago or Detroit. Four tugs do the business of our harbor and vessels of 350 tons pass and repass our cargoes. Two passenger steamers are required to convey travelers between Charlevoix and points on our inland lake. Charlevoix in the place of one store, now has sixteen business establishments, all of which are gradually but constantly enlarging their capacity and increasing their trade. From the midge-board on clear of eleven years ago, we have business well. We have a prosperous thriving village, well built, neat, supplied with nearly three miles of sidewalks. Miles of Conveyors in Ford Plant

AN ENGLISH chain conveyor, three and a half to four miles long, said to be the longest in the world, has just been completed at the Rouge Plant of the Ford Motor Company at Dearborn, Michigan. On it parts of Ford cars in the process of manufacture are transported from one building to another, and completed parts are carried direct to railroad cars for shipment to branch assembly plants.

"CONDEMNED" TALE OF DEVIL'S ISLAND

Following close on his tremendous success of "Birthday Remembered" Roland Culmen's latest starring picture, "Condemned" comes to the Palace Theatre on July 15-16.

It was produced by Samuel Goldwyn. Not as it is in the famous French penal colony of Devil's Island in South America, with a brilliant cast of stage and screen favorites, "Condemned" is said to be Culmen's greatest picture.

Culmen's role is that of a dashing French chef who is to serve a term on the hideous prison which the French call "The Island of Living Death," but when a warring truce on which rule in Holland of unusually went in the workmen learned of the work- men everyday suits to be cut. The assembly line, perfected by Ford, is of most used by automobile manufacturers.

The train of the conveyors in reality consists of a number of units, the greatest of which is 225 in rolling motion. Some 1,200 men and women are employed in other ways about the plant. John Dore, the only name at present known to the public, is the head of those in charge of the conveyor system.

If it were not for the conveyors, according to officials of the Ford Company giant production would not be possible on its present scale.

The Natwood Celebration

The eagle screamed vigorously as it hovered on the city. The weather was most favorable, as far as the events was concerned, but high winds prevented steamboat excursions, thereby keeping many away. The usual exhortations and speeches were delivered, and the Natwood band did their best. Many were present from Boyne City, Petoskey, Bay View, Charlevoix and Bay View Clubs took the field and after a spirited game Bay View was declared the victor by a score of 17 to 15. Charlevoix then met the winning club, and lost a hotly contested game by a score of 16 to 10, although our club was short two of their best men. Hemy Carter officiated the games.

It matters not down on the hills, was a foot race between George H. Vaughn, of Chicago, and the other Charlevoix used to succeed daily, and hop about from here from Chicago or Detroit. THIRTY YEARS AGO

The Newspaper Convention a Big Rousing Success

At this meeting, Thursday morning, the editors were gone, and the scene of this occasion, yet silent, is robbed in physical condition, very tired, but gratified beyond his anticipations.

The editors began to come Monday night, President Slocum and wife registering first at headquarters at the Hotel Elston. Then they came by squads, by every train, from north and south, most of them with wives, and many with charming daughters.

Fifty of them rounded up at the toonmen meeting Tuesday, and when the boys were called to order Wednesday morning, about seventy-five of them answered to roll call. Every session of the day was characterized by country scribes and city scribes mingled with each other—we wish the time was at our disposal to register the names in these columns, but there was the genial and able Mr. Nelson of the Cedar Springs Clipper, Hopley of the Kalamazoo Telegram, Gougar, of the Grand Rapids Herald—but we cannot enumerate.

Tuesday it rained all day, and the rain drummed at the Elston getting acquainted with their wives, and talking politics. Wednesday, their own conveyances took the editors and their ladies about town, and in the afternoon they boarded the steamer Columbia for a trip up around Holy Island. It is needless to say that the boat outings were enjoyed by all.

But the banquet at the Inn Wednesday night, it was the banquet.

The banquet was the crown of success of the event—a feast for the gods, and a "feast of reason and flow of soul." Two hundred sat at the board, at the north end of the beautiful dining room, and Prosper Gordon, Toastmaster Palmer, also the speakers. And here we are obliged to refer to the only drop of bitterness of the event. The death in the prime of life and perfect manhood, of Hon. James O'Donnell was on our away. James O'Donnell was on the eve of his regrets. Richard Vans who kept away and Chase Lindsay, present part of the evening was called home. But the disappointment was of brief duration. Editor Bingley made an able address on the platform in place of Judge Vasey, and Mr Pettingill, Michigan's historic educator, made a most witty and inspiring speech on "Our Fraternity" in place of Mr. Osborn. Mr. Knox address of welcome fully sustained that good citizen's reputation for scholarly delivery and well directed words. Perry Powers, republican candidate for auditor general made one of the best speeches of his life, on "Our Party," and that eloquent orator, Wm. Allen Smith, electrified the audience by his talk on "Our Presidents."

We verily believe that with the possible exception of James O'Donnell, Judge L. H. Palmer is the best toastmaster in Michigan. Judge Palmer's address of six words as height- ening the electric lights above his head and his grace of speech as striking and beautiful as his own charming character.

Only A. T. Hinn the most gracious of Michigan was called upon to speak. Judge Palmer, but spoke very briefly.

Newell's orchestra did grandly, and its stirring patriotic music called forth hearty applause.

It was nearly two o'clock in the morning, when after singing a verse of "America" and three rousing cheers for the party, the crowd broke up and went to their hotels and homes.

Thursday morning early the editors and ladies left for Chesbygan up the Inland Route by courtesy and invitation of Mr. Hammel and the railroad companies. The Pere Marquette gave the party a special car to Petoskey and the C. R. & I. and M. C. extended similar courtesies.

The event in every respect was a rousing success, and the editors go away more than pleased with their treatment.

Our Only Active Volcano

RAINIER, Shasta and Lassen other snow-capped peaks of the Pacific coast region were once volcanoes, and Mt. Hood at least, steam jets are still present, to underscore the slumbering origin in its mile-wide crater. But the only remaining volcano which still sets that title within the United States continuous of Alaska or Hawaii is Mt. Lassen, chief feature of the Lassen Volcanic National park, northeastern California.

Many travelers do not realize that there is a real volcano listed among the fifty visible national assets, and the summer mountain climbers of the country, in the main, have overlooked the facility of exploring a genuine glacier crater as the climax of a mountain trip not extensive climb, and a easier simple one so far as difficulties of access are concerned.

The park lies about 190 miles north of Sacramento, capital of the state, and is most conveniently reached by auto from Redding or Red Bluff, at which point connections are also made with Lassen's main of the Southern Pacific. Automobile roads approach the park from the south, and from the north at a point where a fairly steep ascent to the eastern slope. Trails from both roads lead to the southern ridge of the mountain in scenic climb.

Mount Lassen rises to the east of the Cascade range, and from the north it appears as a single peak, but from the south and east it is seen to be a high rocky plateau of considerable area, much like that of a gigantic pear, and flattened at both ends. From a number of a mile across, mountain-like projections rise. This mass of broken material is many thousand feet above the original mountain, and is the result of the eruptions of the volcano, which are the principal interest of the park. Many of these eruptions occurred in recent years, and the last one in May, 1915, was the most violent of all. Its destructive power was terrific, and the area devastated is still plainly visible. Many acres of timber were leveled by the blast, and the ground was covered with a deep layer of ashes and cinders. Those who were in the park at the time of the eruption describe it as a most awe-inspiring spectacle.

Lassen Peak, the highest point in the park, is 10,577 feet above sea level. The ascent is not difficult, and the trail is well marked. The view from the summit is one of the most magnificent in the mountains of California. On a clear day one can see Mount Shasta, 14,161 feet high, 70 miles to the north, and Mount Helena, 9,100 feet high, 100 miles to the west. Lassen Peak is the highest point in the Cascade range, but there are many other peaks in the park which are only a few hundred feet lower. Among these are Brokeoff mountain, 9,235 feet; Chaos crags, 8,917 feet; Mount Diller, 8,677 feet, and Mount Conard, 8,677 feet.

Within the park are many lakes, the largest of which is Manzanita lake, covering 200 acres. Hot springs and mud pots are numerous, and there are many beautiful waterfalls. Bumpass hell, a group of boiling springs and mud pots, is one of the most interesting features of the park. Here the ground is honeycombed with steam vents, and the boiling springs are of various colors, due to the presence of sulphur, iron and other minerals. Some of the springs are large enough to form miniature lakes, and the largest of these is known as Big Boiler.

Lassen Peak was first ascended in 1851 by a party of pioneers, and the first recorded eruption occurred in 1854. Since that time there have been many eruptions, the most violent of which occurred in 1915. Lassen Peak is now quiet, but there is no telling when it may again become active.

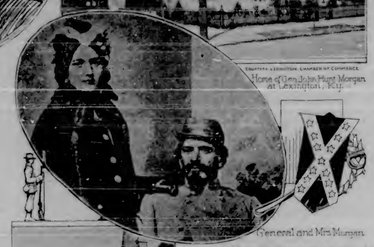
Gen. John H. Morgan, Cavalier of the Old South

Gen. John H. Morgan



General and Mrs. Morgan.

Morgan Statue in Lexington, Ky.

RECENTLY there took place in Lexington, Ky., a ceremony which has thrilled not a few Southerners and, throughout the country and even abroad, has reminded the men of a one of the most picturesque figures in American history. It was the formal opening to the public of the old home of Gen. John Hunt Morgan, famous Confederate cavalryman in the Civil war. This home was erected by a Lexington woman, Mrs. Hunn Johnstone, and had been conveyed to the association of descendants of Confederate men and remaining as it does, their relics of the cavalier of the old South. It also stands as a memorial to a man whose death marked the close of the longest and most dashing cavalry raiding in our history.

Among those who attended the opening was a little group of aged men to whom this ceremony must have come as a most welcome and fitting end to a painful experience. There were only 10 of them and they were the survivors of the thirteen who "rode with Morgan" on those memorable raids which made him the idol of his followers. They entered the lists through widely varied roads—General Morgan and his Lexington friends, and married women—Morgan by his military exploits, and married women by their personality. Some had been in their early and adolescence. They were also of various nationalities and professions. There were Americans by birth, Americans with the color of their skin, Americans of various creeds, and Americans of various degrees of education. Some were of humble origin, others of high social prominence, only gentlemen and some were connected by the common cause. They were all men who had served in the cavalry of the Confederate army, and had ridden with the most famous leader of that branch of the service.

John Hunt Morgan was born in Huntsville, Ala., June 1, 1826, the eldest of the six sons of Charles C. Morgan. When he was four years old his parents moved to Kentucky where he bought a farm in Fayette county. There the future cavalryman grew to manhood and at the outbreak of the Mexican war, although only 20 years old, he was a member of a Kentucky regiment of mounted riflemen. When the Civil war started he had a commission from the governor of Kentucky as captain of cavalry. He was elected major of the First Kentucky cavalry, which was one of the regiments that composed the famous brigade of General Buckner, and participated in the capture of Bowling Green.

Morgan's military qualities were soon recognized by his superiors and on the reorganization of the army in Tennessee he was made a brigadier general. He was then only 36 years old. Soon afterward he was promoted to be major general and placed in command of the cavalry division of the army of Tennessee. Here he remained until the end of the war, with the exception of a short period when he was in command of the cavalry of the department of Southwestern Virginia and East Tennessee.

Morgan's military career was a succession of brilliant exploits, and his name became a household word throughout the South as a daring leader of cavalry. His most famous raid was that which he made through Kentucky and Indiana in the summer of 1863. He crossed the Cumberland river at Burkesville, Ky., on July 4, with 2,500 men, and marched rapidly northward, passing through Columbia, Lebanon, Bardstown and Shepherdsville, and reaching the Ohio river at Brandenburg, Ky., on July 8. Here he crossed into Indiana, and then turned eastward, passing through Corydon, Salem, Vernon, Dupont, Versailles, Sunman, Harrison and Cincinnati, Ohio. He then turned northward, passing through Batavia, Williamsburg, Bethel and Piketon, and crossed the Ohio river into West Virginia at Buffington island on July 19. He had covered more than 1,000 miles in 25 days, and had captured and paroled more than 6,000 men.

Morgan's object in making this raid was to create a diversion in favor of Bragg's army, which was then in Tennessee, and thereby relieve the pressure on Vicksburg, which was then being besieged by Grant. The diversion was successful, for Grant was compelled to send several thousand troops to Kentucky to intercept Morgan, and Bragg was thus relieved of the pressure on his front.

The most spectacular exploit of this famous leader was his raid into Indiana and Ohio in the summer of 1863. Morgan and his men were encamped during the whole summer on the east side of the Cumberland river, which was then the boundary line between the Confederate and Federal armies. Bragg's command and strategy consisted in keeping Rosecrans's army from crossing the river, and Morgan's duty was to prevent the Federals from crossing at any point except Burkesville, which was strongly guarded. Rosecrans, however, sent his army across the river at several points above and below Burkesville, and Bragg was compelled to withdraw his forces in order to prevent them from being cut off. Morgan was ordered to withdraw his command also, but instead of doing so he asked permission to make a raid into Kentucky, and was granted permission to do so.

Morgan's command consisted of about 2,500 men when he started on his raid, but he was reinforced by a number of recruits before he crossed the Ohio river. On reaching Columbia, Ky., Morgan sent a message to Burnside, who was in command of the Federal forces in Kentucky, saying that he was going to Indiana, and that he would be glad to have Burnside's permission to do so. Burnside replied that he would not give the permission, but that he would not interfere with Morgan if he chose to go. Morgan then started on his raid, and Burnside, instead of following him, sent a force to Lebanon, Ky., to intercept him on his return.

Morgan's command was composed of cavalry, and he was thus able to move with great rapidity. He would ride into a town, capture the garrison, destroy the railroad and bridges, and then ride on to the next town. He would parole the prisoners he captured, and they were not exchanged during the war. He would also destroy all the arms and ammunition he captured, and would help himself to all the horses he needed.

Morgan, however, did not pay for what he took, and gave the owners neither orders to receive its equivalent in Confederate money.

Morgan's command was followed by a force of Federal troops under the command of General Hobson, but Morgan managed to keep ahead of them, and they were unable to overtake him. Hobson then sent a message to Burnside asking him to intercept Morgan, but Burnside replied that he could not do so, as his men were worn out with fighting and marching, and that Morgan would have to be left to Hobson. Hobson then followed Morgan into Indiana, and Burnside sent a force into Ohio to intercept him.

Morgan's command crossed the Ohio river at Brandenburg, Ky., on July 8, and entered Indiana. He then passed through Corydon, Salem, Vernon, Dupont, Versailles, Sunman, Harrison and Cincinnati, Ohio, and then turned northward, passing through Batavia, Williamsburg, Bethel and Piketon, and crossed the Ohio river into West Virginia at Buffington island on July 19. He had covered more than 1,000 miles in 25 days, and had captured and paroled more than 6,000 men.

A MATTER OF PRINCIPLE

All arguments over tariffs allow the economic advantages and disadvantages, real and imagined, of government ownership of railroads, are less important than upholding the ideal of "individualism" that has made America the world's most progressive nation.

It is not of great moment whether or not a railroad company operated by the government could operate at a profit or a loss in considering whether it is more desirable to have a railroad system which is owned by the people or by a corporation which is owned by a few individuals. But it is of great moment whether or not we are going to adopt a fundamental principle of our government as against a principle of government which is foreign to it.

There are two kinds of government. The first is that developed by the framers of the American Republic, a government which does as much for the people as it is possible, leave the individual free to do as he pleases. The second is that adopted by the Russian Soviets which sees but little for the people but for which the people do all.

An individual has a right to do anything he wants to do with his own property as long as it does not injure his neighbor. The individual has a right to work as many hours as he pleases and as hard as he pleases, and until most every law of every decent state is disobeyed by unorganized labor, it is wrong to attempt to force by government ownership of railroads or anything else.

The individual has a right to be a socialist if he thinks socialism is better than individualism, but he has no right to destroy individualism by force. The result of "individualism" that has made America the world's most progressive nation.

ATTACKING AMERICAN LABOR

Allen Thomas, director of the national International Labor Office of Geneva, has been touring the country and on every stage has a fling at the American standard of living. He says that until most every bit of every person is destroyed by unorganized power and by the power of the state labor for which the people live is of little or no account.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS
Frank P. Litchert

No matter what one may think of the results of the London Naval Conference and how far the conference went toward giving uncle Sam parity with Great Britain in naval strength, the conference aside from the treaty had one beneficial effect. For it stimulated interest and understanding among the people of the United States as to our merchant marine and its importance to the national welfare.

In the many discussions of parity both here and abroad, attention was frequently called to the fact that the United States could not gain real parity because the British government has a greatly superior merchant marine. Merchant ships, it was pointed out, are a valuable aid to the navy in case of war, and the great liners can be converted into cruisers and raiders of enemy commerce. All of which is of course true. It was well to centre the attention of our people on the fact that the British outclass us so far as a merchant marine is concerned. When the people get to thinking about it they will decide that, since it would be foolish to ask John Bull to reduce his merchant marine, the sensible thing is to build up our own.

Now the naval treaty fixes no limits on the merchant marine. It is up to us to do our best to overcome by applying this inferiority in merchant marine that has existed since the days of our merchant marine, the conference will not have been held in vain so far as naval affairs are concerned. The struggle over the naval treaty may be, although it is of course extremely likely that the naval treaty will be ratified sooner or later.

European shipping interests have been paying rich dividends of late. So the results we are achieving in remodeling our merchant marine. Most of the European experts are willing to believe that our reawakened interest in the question of a merchant marine is only a passing fancy. They say that Americans are full of moods and impulses, and that after awhile we will get tired of developing our merchant marine, and will be as indifferent again permitting the ships of Europe to carry out trade just as we did in the days before the Civil War and the world struggle.

Now it is up to us patriotic Americans to show these Europeans that we are not going to let our interest in our sea-borne carriers, and those because it could help our navy in time of need, should wane in an important measure—but because a merchant marine is highly useful to us in time of peace too. We know what the international rubber commission cruise to Guayaquil has done if the carrying of our foreign trade gets into the hands of European shipping interests they are in a position to dictate to us what they will do. We know why such interests cannot charge us whatever freight rates they please, and give us just as good or just as poor service as they please.

Again, national pride is at stake. We ought to show our critics on the other side of the Atlantic that we are not the emotional, changeable people that they think us, and that our American enterprise can build and carry on successfully a merchant marine as good as any in the world. A start has already been made. As Irving Glover, Assistant Postmaster General, said recently at Washington:

"Chagrin off to the gallant European of the North German Lloyd Steamship line on her wonderful performance in crossing the Atlantic in 4 days, 17 hours and 6 minutes.

"But she then back quickly to be ready to take them off again as one of the giants of the new merchant fleet of the United States which in fast commercial service will soon smoke the 'five sisters' from the passage Queen of the North Atlantic' as I place it where it properly belongs at the head-end of an American built ship, built by the brains and brawn of American workmen in the shipyards of America."

DECATUR'S SWORD

A great sensation of Commodore Decatur, just deceased, has deeded to the United States Navy a sword that was presented by the city of Philadelphia to the famous American naval officer.

The brave, romantic and genius-endowed Decatur remains one of the most attractively striking characters in the history of the nation. His sword was presented by the city of Philadelphia to the famous American naval officer.

ENFORCING "THE NATIONAL ANTHEM"

A national anthem caused by "civilized, prominent patriots and music lovers asserted in an inquiry conducted by Women's Home Companion.

If a national song cannot hold the place in the hearts of a people with out wire-pulling and legislative, decree it is not truly an expression of nationality. Babbo Tuffo Babbo replies on behalf of American women. The national anthem selected by a given period in the development of a nation and bolstered up merely by patriotic fanfare. The symposium brought out.

Time change—the national song changes," the women's jury decides. Americans in each succeeding generation will cherish those songs which seem best to express both old traditional and new aspirations. Always time might compel the performance of certain songs on certain occasions, but in can never force the people to keep genuinely on a song they do not like.

The jury's objections to The Star Spangle Banner were that it is too warlike and does children a one-sided idea of patriotism. Further objection was that it is an "occasional" song, inspiring in a great national crisis but rather flat at other times. Some of those interviewed felt that it is unsingable except by experts.

FOR SAFER DRIVING.

Wanted—an automatic candy dispenser for the motor car dashboard.

We have cars equipped with radio, cigarette lighters, foot rests, smart trays, vanities and what-not, but so far no accessory has been provided whereby the man behind the wheel may regale himself with a sweet while he drives—without a front seat partner who from time to time plops a bonbon into the driver's mouth may be so considered.

The demand for the dashboard candy dispenser follows the discovery by the scientists at Cornell University that frequent doses of sugar increase the motorist's skill and endurance. Accidents, they say, frequently result from depleted energy, especially toward the end of a long trip.

Acting upon the advice of the College professors, several automobile club bulletins have stressed the importance of stocking up carbohydrates at the start of a long motor journey. Since candy furnishes carbohydrates in the most concentrated and delectable form, a variety dispenser for the dashboard is clearly indicated.

I'll take a million dollar item—and we give it away gratis.

BACK ON THE SEAS

At the present time the ocean-going American merchant fleet was employed in established lines on regular routes to the United States. A total of 671 vessels of 4,365,000 gross tons. This shows a total per cent increase in numbers and nearly 500 p. c. gain in tonnage since 1914. With few exceptions these vessels are of 7,000 gross tons and over and 14 per cent of the number and 65 per cent of the gross tonnage are new tonnage private ownership.

It is certain that without the strong support of the government the American marine would have reverted to the humiliating and really position it occupied before the war. The American people have foreseen by the remarks of the past. They are convinced that the economic progress, trade stability and security can be largely assured by the maintenance of an adequate American merchant marine.— Wireless Intelligencer.

Sturgis was brought up on a farm of seven hundred acres, which had been the family home since long before the Revolutionary war, and learned that of Ethan Allen of Vermont, a near relative. Her father, who operated this farm and conducted a produce commission business in the city of Boston Massachusetts, was prominent in Vermont politics and associated therein with the late Senator Jacob A. Cullamer. His grandmother was Jemima Knapp of the Knapp's patron family of Waterford, N. Y., that took a prominent part in the Revolution during the early days of the struggle in New York state, and she was connected with other old New England families. The genealogical records of her family in the archives of the New York Historical Society show descent from the Scottish Stuarts and the family coat of arms is guaranteed with the royal seal remnant of Scotland, which seems to substantiate this claim.

In early womanhood, Miss Jemima removed to Brooklyn, N. Y., where she achieved considerable success as a painter of chinaware. TRUE TALES OF THE TELEPHONE

Soap Bubbles—and Service

SOAP bubbles play an important part in making telephone service dependable.

In order to function properly, the lines insulated wires and telephone cables, illustrated above, must be protected in a waterproof sheath. A pinhole in the lead-antimony sheath which encloses them may cause untold difficulties that methods of detecting such leaks is to place both ends of a section of cable, which is then filled with a dry gas under pressure. The gas quickly finds and escapes from any fissures in the sheath or in the joints at splices. Pressure gages reveal the existence of such leaks, but do not show where they are. Sometimes the escaping gas may be traced by its characteristic hissing sound, but in many cases it is necessary to apply a cupsuds solution to the section being tested. Wherever there is a leak the gas blows a series of small bubbles and the difficulty is located and repaired.

Only through painstaking watchfulness can telephone service be maintained at the high standard that it is possible for the Bell System to provide dependable service.

TARIFF FACTS VS TARIFF FALSEHOODS

By George B. Lockwood

The American people have been treated to an avalanche of falsehoods about the new tariff, extending over 18 years, by newspaper and politicians who, when the increased tariffs of the 1922 law were put into effect, declared that they would kill our foreign trade, that unemployment, reduce wages and increase the cost of living—every one of which charges has been proved false by events.

Here are a few facts which should be more generally known:

Of the 3226 items in the old tariff law, 2176 were left unchanged.

Duties were increased on only 809 articles, decreases were made in 235 items.

Duties collected on all classes in the dutiable schedules, basis, exclusive of the free list, average over 16 per cent, as compared with nearly 14 per cent under the old tariff law of 1913, and the McKinley law, 49 per cent under the Wilson law, 38 per cent under the Dingley law and 19 per cent under the Payne-Aldrich act. No tariff laws passed in 50 years have had lower average tariff rates except the Underwood law and the Fordney-McCumber law.

The percentage of our imports entering free of duty will be about the same under the new law as under the law it succeeded, about 65 per cent. Of dutiable imports in 1929, valued at $4,091,000,000, consumption is the value of $3,665,000,000 or 90 per cent, was admitted free or at reduced rates of duty. Of the remaining $426,000,000 worth, 10 per cent, the duty was increased, 6 per cent decreased and 84 per cent remained unchanged.

A STOCK MARKET ALIBI

The Detroit stock market 14 months ago, at the time that had been announced by Charlevoix, called for a reduction in the construction of that city.

Such a proportionate reduction does not conform to the many statements issued by the Federal Reserve Board in which it has gone to the length of saying that business is normal. The United States Treasury moved perfectly satisfied right inside of a year ago that the market was being manipulated," and that the stock market crash was the result of the Wall Street gamblers. Now which is one of the reasons advanced for not taking control but in the open.

Andrew Orkin, publisher of the New York Times, says: "The American people should be reassured by the fact that the fundamentals of our business are sound, and that our industry is operating on a profitable basis." By all means, let us have Orkin in a good humor if we have to close up every mill, mine and factory in the United States and sell our whole market over to the cheap labor sweat-shops of Europe.

Mr. H. H. Mattson with the Michigan Department of Public safety, and nine captains of State police were a visitor in Charlevoix Thursday and Friday.

Fred G. Bellinger, son George, accompanied by Miss D. K. Eaton the latter of Pullman, made the drive to Glen Lake Tuesday when they spent the day with friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Nick Brown returned to Chicago Monday, after spending several days here, guests of Mrs. Brown's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles J. Zeitler, other relatives and friends.

Postmaster W. W. Boyle of St. James, was a Charlevoix visitor Monday, when he came to the mainland on the S. S. Harbor Pilot.

Frank A. Kenyon of Mackinac Island was a business caller here Saturday. His sons are hotel as he came to Charlevoix after the steamer here and returned in time to drive the streets on the 5:00 p. m. ferry.

Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Bartsch of Pinckney, were Charlevoix visitors for a few hours last Thursday. They were making a business trip to Petoskey and Charlevoix last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Braithwaite, of Grand Haven, were visitors here Saturday and Friday.

Miss Lizzie Gallagher and nephew, Jack Gallagher of Green Bay, Wis., were visitors here last week.

J. J. Quarnby and C. L. Warner made a business trip to the mainland today.

James O'Connell, of Chicago, is visiting at the home of his uncle, Mrs. Nels Laffreniere.

Mrs. Chas. P. Gallagher was a Charlevoix visitor Wednesday, coming from Petoskey, where she spent the month of her sister, Mrs. Mary A. Tyler, at Charlevoix in 1825. Sturgis was brought up on a farm of seven hundred acres, which had been the family home since long before the Revolutionary war, and learned that of Ethan Allen of Vermont, a near relative. Her father, who operated this farm and conducted a produce commission business in the city of Boston Massachusetts, was prominent in Vermont politics and associated therein with the late Senator Jacob A. Cullamer. His grandmother was Jemima Knapp of the Knapp's patron family of Waterford, N. Y., that took a prominent part in the Revolution during the early days of the struggle in New York state, and she was connected with other old New England families. The genealogical records of her family in the archives of the New York Historical Society show descent from the Scottish Stuarts and the family coat of arms is guaranteed with the royal seal remnant of Scotland, which seems to substantiate this claim.

In early womanhood, Miss Jemima removed to Brooklyn, N. Y., where she achieved considerable success as a painter of chinaware. It was during the period that she met Mr. Butters and the couple were married at Seymour, Connecticut, as the home of her uncle, on October 14, 1895. Since that time, Mrs. Butters had made her home in Charlevoix, taking prominently identified with the social, religious and civic life of the town. She was an earnest and ardent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church here, though originally of the Congregational faith.

Of blood relations, Mrs. Butters is survived by her nieces, Mrs. Robert B. Kimber of Detroit, Mrs. William Elwell of Wallingford, Conn., and Miss Clarrie Winn of Brooklyn, N. Y., and her nephews, Frederick V. Tyler, of the city and Channing T. White of Brooklyn, N. Y. Of her husband's relatives, there are Archie H. Buttars of Fallston and family, Mrs. Alison Rickard of Traverse City and family and Mrs. Stella Kaye and sons of Scottville, Mich. Mr. Buttars' granddaughter, Mrs. Frank Kelly of San Diego, a grandson, Archie Parsons of San Diego and a grandson, Harold Parmelee, who is in the United States Navy.

Salesman: And what kind of motor car have would you like, sir? Do you care for a good, loud blast?

Naughty Customer: No, I want something that just groans.

"Does your fiancee know much about automobiles?"

"Heavens, no! She asked me if I could put my car by stripping the gears."

MRS. EMMA C. BUTTARS PASSES

Former Charlevoix Resident Dead at San Diego, California

While not entirely unexpected, causing our consideration her advanced age and poor health, news of the death of Mrs. Emma C. Buttars, widow of the late Archibald Buttars, which occurred at her home in San Diego, California, on Saturday, July 12, 1930, at the age of 85 years, 6 months and 12 days, was received here with deep regret by her many friends in this city in which she was so long a resident.

Mrs. Buttars, who had been living in her apartments in San Diego, California, to be near her grandchildren by marriage, were her husband's death in 1926, had been ill for several months but thought she was improving and would soon be up and around. Her age, however, was against her and her heart did not prove stronger and on July 9 she passed quietly away as she slept, at the hour of 6:45 p. m., without a struggle.

No word has at this time been received as to the date of the funeral in California, but the remains will be brought to this city some time next week to be interred in the family plot at Brookside cemetery. Archie H. Buttars of Fallston, nephew of the deceased, will go there here to return with the body to Charlevoix.

Emma Caroline Bliss was born in Shelburne, Vermont, on March 1, 1845, the daughter of James S. and Nancy Sutton Bliss. She was one of a family of thirteen children, of whom she had been the sole survivor since the death of her sister, Mrs. Mary A. Tyler, at Charlevoix in 1925. Sturgis was brought up on a farm of seven hundred acres, which had been the family home since long before the Revolutionary war, and learned that of Ethan Allen of Vermont, a near relative. SEASON'S TREND IS LACEWARD; PEASANT PRINTS NOW FAVORED

This a style-wise woman who, planning her new gown, the frock she would hold in readiness for smart luncheons, dinner parties and summer dress-up occasions, has for her blueprint lacework, or she is content to let the world of fashion under its magic sway.

When it comes to getting fashion's latest commands, how well you find a way and a rare art in evading both, gentlemen note so often, is uniformly gathered up and tied at every shrine in the purposeless of lace we are seeing these electrifying days of a style season that still smacks and quivers with waves and the blouse, for even our tans and our sunburns are not safe from the lacy touch of the fascinating substitute.

The sumptuous gown pictured stresses to the greatest degree the importance of the opening of the left side. A very contemporary frock this, and one that will be worn by the girl who is up to the minute. Perhaps it is a bit too much lace, but then, as we have said, fashion is the most decisive autocrat. Some say that the gown pictured is a bit too much for the daytime occasion, but when it comes to the matter of evening gowns, why not?

Therefore, the lace frock pronounces itself in accordance with the fashionable mode for evening and for dressy afternoon affairs. Lace, in fact, seems to be the very favorite of the season, and it is a source of much satisfaction to the designers of "fashion's creations" when

And the "scissors" aids by the figure posited on the gayly flowery, enveloping lace in the picture, the work, then, is one that fascinates the eye with the fascinating possibilities.

Seeing Big League BASEBALL

By BILLY EVANS

Sportswriter, Big League Umpire and General Manager of the Cleveland Indians

As umpire's job at first is a comfortable, though sometimes exacting, one, and as baseball progresses and the umpire's duties become more and more difficult, the umpire's position is more and more unenviable. Nowadays, too, umpires, instead of being considered, as they used to be, a necessary evil, are looked upon as a part of baseball, and are treated accordingly. Then, too, the umpire is now given a salary that is commensurate with the importance of his position, and the days when umpires were compelled to "chip in" to buy baseballs are gone forever.

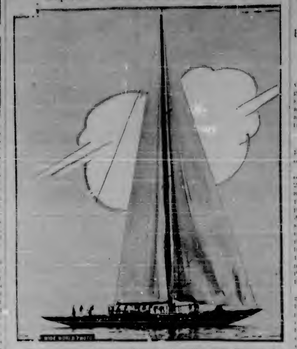
Lipton Confident of Shamrock



Thomas Lipton expresses confidence in the ability of the Shamrock V to win the America's cup this summer.

"I think I can manage to wind the cup from my American friends," he said. "I would be foolish to say how I am not going to say anything about it until my yacht arrives at Sandy Hook."

MATCHES TRADED FOR CORD WOOD

Heinie Manush in an Exchange for Goose Goslin.

It is not yet apparent whether any of the big league moguls had any secrets concealed when they engaged in their recent freeforall trade gathering. Napoleon naturally was accused by the ruckless fandom on which they juggled talent from place to place. The impulse, to be well known by a bally of slipping trickery methods to their customers is common to all changes by until cord wood. This isn't always the case, for it occurs frequently enough to entertain the suspicion that some of the transfers made last before the ink is dry on the contracts. Such an unsolicited an appearance was that of Heinie Manush and Goose Goslin, Detroit Baseball Club players, in the Washington uniform in a game on the afternoon of April 14. Manush and Goslin, it appeared, had been traded to the Senators for cord wood.

"Any connection between the two deals?" they were asked when the Detroit players were sent to the Senators.

"No, you can't beat 'em" was the answer.

COLLIDES WITH HEAVY MACHINERY

F. V. Tyler Received Minor Injuries Auto a Complete Wreck

Kinaking a light journey on the road by a screaming gang, for the tail light on an automobile, spelled disaster for F. V. Tyler Sunday night, when he crashed into a dredge crane stretched across the highway near Bay Shore, and as the story here will have it, "ran out of gasoline."

Mr. Tyler was coming into the city as a result of the report, but there are still a number of rough places on the road section. The car an Essex that has been used for some time by Mr. Tyler, is practically a total loss. An inventory of the damages shows that replacement necessary will be made in the following: fender, one crane, tail light in fixtures, such as would go a long way toward the purchase price of a new car. The same make.

TWENTY TWO TONS CHERRIES IN TWO DAYS

It was days Attorney John Tweddle has taken 22 tons and 700 pounds of cherries from his orchard acres of the city on the Barnhill avenue road, an alertness record for his farm and possibly any other of similar size.

This tonnage is sent in on the Traverse City Canning company Thursday and Friday, more than half the total tonnage from his farm last year. About 100 pickers are at work in the orchard. His production last year was 40 tons. This year he estimates more than double that.—Traverse City Record-Eagle.

$60,000,000 TO BUILD TWO LEVIATHANS

Washington, D. C., July 19.—Documents relating to the pending sale of two government owned ocean ship lines and an application for $60,000,000 of government funds with which to build two super liners to replace ships operated today by the shipping board for delivery to President Hoover's advisory committee on shipping.

Ira Campbell, secretary of the committee, asked that the documents be sent to him in New York, where the committee has begun work.

The proposals to be studied first are the application of the United States lines for money with which to build the two new ships, and the offer of the same lines to purchase the American Diamond and American France Steamship lines as contrasted with the bids of the present operators of these ships, the Black Diamond and the Cosmopolitan Steamship companies.

Samuel Goodacre, secretary of the shipping board, said the information requested and "other general data" would be forwarded to Campbell—Chicago Tribune.

Ira Campbell, Secretary, mentioned in the above article formerly resided here. He is a brother of P. D. Campbell of Charlevoix and his mother, Mrs. P. D. Campbell has lived in this city for many years.

"Frugality Makes a Poor Man Rich"

Seneca, the philospher of olden times, had the right idea—whether or not he practiced it is another question.

Frugality, economy, saving, will indeed raise the poor man to reasonable comfort.

Even though you may not be poor (probably are not) still you will go much further if you save persistently, for it isn't the amount you save that counts so much as the persistence with which you save.

RESIDENCE

RAIDED BY OFFICERS LAST SUNDAY AFTERNOON

MUCH LIQUOR SEIZED

John J. Knight Arrested Charged With Possession of Liquor

Sunday afternoon two members of the State police force, Sheriff Vaughan and his deputies made a Business call at the Knight Cottage, 204 Belvedere avenue, made a search of the premises and upon their return to the office, in the trunk with them a large amount of perfectly good liquors to be used as evidence of illegal possession and later probably dumped into the sewer, in the usual way of disposing of the confiscated liquor taken in the raid.

That the residence for some time past has been something of a resident route for parties out of the ordinary has been an open secret, the nature of which doesn't affect us, but from a traffic standpoint and to the public service, neither, hence the raid made by officers was not a surprise event, and as a matter of fact would not have created surprise, as many had said it had been staged weeks earlier.

That some with parties have been there at the cottage in question is well known and that the place has been a rendezvous for a number of days is also well known, who enjoy taking the high spots and enjoy wild life are matters generally understood, and for such the officers makes for a luxurious and comfortable place to call late in a summer night informal.

Sheriff Vaughan, armed with a search warrant and accompanied by undersheriff Henry W. Cook, Deputy Henry Marshall and two state troopers, Kenwaters and Black from the Cheboygan station invaded and searched the residence, finding many bottles of various liquors here, etc., which they transferred to the housing of the sheriff.

John J. Knight, whose permanent home is Kalamazoo and a member of one of the oldest and most prominent families, and well known here where he has spent many summer seasons, was charged with possession of the outlawed liquors placed under arrest and an hour or two later giving a bond for $1000 for his appearance before the circuit court was released by the Sheriff.

The raid was followed by quick action by the Court Judge Parm C. Gilbert pending, with promptly assumed Knight $2,000 payable $500 in August $500 in October and placed him on probation until October 1931. In connection young Knight signed a waiver under which any public official is authorized to enter and search his property wherever located at any time in accordance with the findings and order of Judge Gilbert will settle th, article, otherwise the case will be heard from again, while a noncompliance is sure to spell disaster for some one.

MANY FARMERS GROWING CERTIFIED POTATOES

From all indications Charlevoix county will again be represented by a splendid group of farmers raising the highest quality potatoes to be grown anywhere—namely, certified seed. This year, however, we have a smaller acreage and a smaller number of farmers raising potatoes.

In the production of certified seed, certain requirements have to be met which are so rigid that but few growers can get to first base.

Proper spraying equipment, etc., must potato machinery, fertile soil, thorough knowledge of diseases, and proper facilities for handling and storage are prime requisites.

In every case the use of seed growers includes experienced production, so that we can expect a very successful season.

Following are the potato growers raising certified seed:

Clint Blanchard, Charlevoix, 20 acres; 4; George Meggison, Charlevoix, 4; Roscoe Smith, East Jordan, 4; Arthur Seiler, East Jordan, 5; E. P. Jensen, Walloon Lake, 12; W. R. Straw, Charlevoix, 2; L. R. Barber, Boyne City, 5; Henry Eckert, Charlevoix, 3; Frank Behling, Boyne City, 4; Harry Behling, Boyne City, 3; H. C. Stephens, Boyne City, 3; H. C. Hughens, Boyne City, 10; Lee Sneathen, Charlevoix, 3½; John Aiello, East Jordan, 6; W. H. Hanley, Charlevoix, 2; H. J. Kenchase, Boyne City, 5; R. V. Lisbum, East Jordan, 4½.

CANDIDATE FOR LIEUT. GOVER NOR IN TOWN

Hon. Edgar W. Thompson of Detroit, candidate for Lieutenant Governor, was a Charlevoix visitor on Wednesday, where he met many of his personal and political friends. Mr. Thompson has announced himself as a candidate for the republican nomination, particularly as regards his candidacy. However, he was not planning every one of the finals scheduled around the "Indian Bowl" and performances at Interlochen, and Mr. Thompson had to leave Charlevoix at noon to keep an engagement at Petoskey. Mr. Thompson has a host of friends at Northern Michigan who will be pleased to support him in the primary. Mr. Thompson is a resident of Detroit, but is graduate of Northern Michigan College, where he was prominent in athletics and a member of the varsity football team. He is a brother of Mrs. Miller who was a former resident of Charlevoix, where she has many friends and, no doubt, will be a visitor here during the coming campaign.

Mr. Miller was engaged as a man of executive ability and subsequent events have proved he is a large circle of acquaintances.

The Charlevoix school band will play at the Interlochen Bowl next Sunday morning, July 27, at 11 o'clock to be heard by those who attend the concert at the Bowl that afternoon and evening. Consider the poor fish!

A TRUE sportsman is as careful about his pipe tobacco as he is about his lures. Why distress the poor fish and taint the pure air with a strong pipe when Sir Walter Raleigh's favorite smoking tobacco costs so little, and is so mild and fragrant? The success of the Sir Walter Raleigh blend is due to the use of very choice Burleys, which, although mild, lack neither body nor flavor. The quality is uniform, and the gold foil wrap retains all the natural freshness and fragrance.

The Old Chisholm Trail

A TEXAS LONGHORN From The Yale University Press Publication of America's Natural Resources

A HERD ON THE TRAIL From The Yale University Press Publication of America's Natural Resources

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

THE Old Chisholm Trail! What a wealth of romance is contained in those four words—what pioneering daring and hardship! Who of us can hear the lusty lines to strike forward" without the thrill that Stanley felt when he found Livingstone in the heart of Africa? Who of us can read one of Frank Hoch Wheeler and Will Shakespeare's cowboy songs without seeing the dusty trail herds and the wild riders of the plains in stirring conflicts through some Coolidge pass, in the Bonham, Texas, court yards lined by the rude palaces of the cattle barons, or on the slope of Iowa Hill in the famous hostile "wheels within the Oregon." These bold, dramatic scenes personify authentic impressions in the endless drama of which the cowboy song—Wheeler's the master of singers calls the "way."

Just behind the Old Chisholm Trail was just the era of the exposition of the cattle industry—the cowboy, romance, picturesque and long-lived cattle drives from the open ranges of the Southwest to the railroad lines from the terms of Kansas to as far north as Montana, of which a vivid description by the late Joseph McCoy, of Abilene, Kansas, is the most famous—the old cattle capital will always be remembered as a conspicuous feature of old times.

But it is the old Chisholm Trail to which a romantic interest attaches. From the early days of cowboy song and story in its own Texas it is to be found paved highways extending from south Texas to Abilene, Kansas. Many sections of the trail itself have been resurrected the unfenced days will be found as an authority as possible and these last-children will spend over it, covering as many miles in a few hours as it took a trail herd to cover in the same number of days. Recently Frank Dobie, formerly connected as a professor of English at the University of Texas, and a recognized authority on the early history of the Southwest, appeared before the state highway commission with a plea for the proper marking of the old Chisholm Trail highways. As a result of Dobie's plea and the support of the old Trail drivers' association of Texas, the commission has agreed to place appropriate markers on the road through Texas and these markers will be the pioneer boys of a long-born area.

The Old Chisholm Trail has been a subject for many-degree, now to the beauty of the way on whom it was named and its exact route. It was often been asserted that it was named for John Mongum Chisum (whose name has been variously spelled Chism, Chisolm and Chisholm), a Texas cattleman whose great herd ranges won him the title of "King of the Pecos," who was a figure in the Texas cattle trade for many years, a commissioner to the Bosque Grande County was in New Mexico when the old Abilene Trail was started on its road to fame. Investigations in Abilene have revealed many facts, however, definitely established that the trail was named for a backwood Cherokee Indian, named Jesse Chisholm.

Half a century ago the old drivers who "went up the Chisholm Trail" in the old days and for one score thirty left you exactly what his route was. This is the story of the trail as the Texas cattle known by themselves will be entirely different. On each township line one finds the name of the cattle over the original old Chisholm Trail.

Before entering upon story—and it can be established by the two authorities, it is necessary to introduce Jesse Chisholm and tell how it was that his name was given to the trail. Jesse Chisholm was born in 1806 and Cherokee Indian country in East Tennessee in 1826. His father, John Chisholm, the son of a Scotch Chisholmson the last revolutionary chief of the Cherokees, was of Scotch descent. His mother was a member of the noted Rogers family of the Cherokee nation and an older sister of Jesse became the Cherokee wife of Gen. Sam Houston.

Many years after Jesse Chisholm established a trading post not far from where the old California Trail crossed the North Canadian river. Later on he had another trading post at Council Grove on the North Canadian a few miles west of the present Oklahoma city. By this time he had dissected his own people entirely and was an important member of the Wichita tribe. It was in the early 1860's from Kansas at the outbreak of the Civil war. For more than six years the Wichitas camped at the mouth of Rock creek, in the present Mound, Texas, due to the spring of 1867 was the first year that any considerable number of cattle were driven to the north over the Chisholm Trail. Many of these cattle were driven to Abilene, Kansas, and shipped from there to eastern markets. Others were driven to Baxter Springs, Kansas, and Fort Dodge, Kansas, and shipped from there to eastern markets. Others were driven to Baxter Springs, Kansas, and Fort Dodge, Kansas, and shipped from there to eastern markets.

Many thousand cattle were driven over the Chisholm Trail, but it probably would never have become famous had it not been for the cattle trade which developed so soon after the Civil war. The first shipment was sold by Joseph G. Thompson, secretary of the Oklahoma Historical society, at Abilene, Kansas, in the summer of 1867. Several years ago, as follows:

"The route of the drive of four small herds of cattle and mules in 1866 throughout the North. On the other hand, the ranges of Texas were overstocked and cattle were cheap. Drovers were made to transport Texas cattle to the Missouri river markets for the Missouri, Iowa and Illinois, but these markets refused discouraged. Joseph McCoy, then a young cattleman, saw that the Indian Territory into Missouri always carried cattle fever infection with them, and, when this was established, sold to the entire stock, great losses followed.

"Among the people who had been interested in trying to introduce Texas cattle into the Indian lands of the north was Joseph McCoy, of Springfield, Ill., farm-bred and a born trader by occupation. Losing money on the stockers did not discourage him, and he decided to carry the experiment until he finally dreamed the dream of the cattle town.

"The cattle trail from Texas crossed Red river at a point known as Red River Station, and the town of Bonham, Texas. It followed a compromise trail from Red River Station, through the extreme northern part of the old Chickasaw Nation and a few miles west of the present Denison, Texas, to the southern boundary of the Cherokee Strip. Wichita and Comanche-Kiowa Indian reservations.

"It crossed the Washita river near the present town of Berwyn, in Carter county, Texas, and the North Canadian just south of Tuttle, in the North Canadian valley, O. Indian country, southward to a junction with the Chisholm Trail at the crossing of the Canadian, between King Fisher and Dover. Thence it followed the line of the present Chisholm and Western."

Further confirmation of the fact that the original Chisholm Trail did not enter in Texas to cross Indian, is contained in the following statement by Professor Dobie, made in connection with the recent agitation to mark that long famous highway in so far as it is possible with the "sign of the long horn":

"The original Chisholm Trail did not commission of Red river. Drivers from the lower Rio Grande country had drifters from the eastern central plains of Texas converged once south into the Chisholm Trail. Since the Chisholm Trail had a well defined history in its southern crossings, it seems longer than the subject trail itself. The reason, like a river, had many streams emptying into it, from the small and powerful streams of convergence. It was natural that the southern drivers should in general follow the trail of the original road, the Chisholm Trail.

"The market in Dodge City, Kan., opened in 1872-73, and for more than a decade Dodge City was the principal market of the world, and the trail which drove increasingly in Abilene had shifted west, now served as a starting point. Ellsworth, on the Chisholm Trail, was established in 1867 and became a famous shipping point. Wichita, on the Chisholm Trail, was established in 1868 and became a famous shipping point. (An Old Cowboy Song)

Come a-ti-yi-yippee, yippee ay, yippee ay,
Come a-ti-yi-yippee, yippee ay.

I'm a-leavin' Texas, old Fort Worth and Clay,
Come a-ti-yi-yippee, yippee ay,
Start up the trail and think of home every day,
Come a-ti-yi-yippee, yippee ay.

Last time I saw Paw he was a-standin' in the door,
With the rain a-comin' down in a regular pour,
He hollered to me as I was a-mindin' the herd,
Come a-ti-yi-yippee, yippee ay.

Well, it's cloudy to the east and it's clear to the west,
And I'll get plumb wet before I get rest,
Come a-ti-yi-yippee, yippee ay.

THE THEATRE

LARGEST STAGE HAD TO BE BUILT FOR SCENES OF "SALLY"

No theatre or studio stage in Hollywood is, or Angeles was large enough to hold the spectacular ballet sequence for Marilyn Miller's "Sally," the First National and Vitaphone picture which comes to the Palace Theatre Friday and Saturday.

So a theatre stage was built especially for the picture, on the largest sound stage at the Burbank Studios. It was 150 feet wide, 80 feet from the footlights to the top of the proscenium arch, and 110 feet deep from the curtain to the back wall.

The stage was equipped with special sectional, curtain and drapes, and made practical in every way, perfect a touches of floor coverings and other mechanical devices.

But this huge platform like cement, was all gone and most of the Chaplin Ranch Indian village, which was a complete replica of 122 acres in Riverside, Cal. Thousands of yards.

More than 500 singers are lights and the smaller spotlights were used to light the stage, with a corps of electricians in charge.

Many new ideas in stage lighting and scenery were conceived and developed especially for this production, and the result is one of the most spectacular ever seen on a screen, it is said.

The picture at present is in Technicolor.

"THE LOVE PARADE" IS ENDOWED WITH GENIUS —BORN QUALITIES

Maurice Chevalier, who has become the greatest European actor to appear in American films, will be here and there for a prolonged period at the Palace when "The Love Parade" opens at the Palace Theatre for a 2 days' engagement on Sunday next.

"The Love Parade" is something different in entertaining manner than has been offered us heretofore, a personage entirely different from all other screen types.

In the "The Love Parade" we see Chevalier as a young attache of the Paris embassy to the court of Queen Louise of Sylvania, played by Jeanette MacDonald, who, after being married by proxy to the queen, arrives in Sylvania to find that his supposed consort is the queen's maid of honor. He soon wins the heart of the queen herself, and the picture ends with the Parisian and the queen happily married.

There are many realistic qualities that carry "The Love Parade" to the heights of entertainment. People in New York paid $11 a seat to see it when it opened at the Criterion. And it must have been worth it, for critics the land, day said 120 "raves" and superlatives in making their newspaper reports on this great musical romance smash.

FLAPPER CHANGES STOCKINGS

The American flapper launched a recent stir-crisis in the knitting industry. While it is not the first time the flapper has brought about radical improvements in our national affairs, the strange part of it is they apparently blissfully unconscious of having disturbed a vast industry. But with their usual cause of impudence, coupled with genius, flappers have stumbled onto the fact that silk stockings are not wore well and were sure, browning than when worn the orthodox way. The idea spread rapidly, and now practically whether their stockings are worn the right way or not.

The manufacturers of hosiery began to make hosiery to meet the fad of the moment, making them heels and seams. The stocking industry had to be sweet, otherwise the flapper would hardly deign to be interested.

HOME MANAGEMENT PROJET FOR CHARLEVOIX COUNTY WOMEN

Women are generally more ready to accept projects with the object of helping them in the management of their homes. Home Management Project, an activity of the Charlevoix County Relief Administration, is proving this statement true. Mrs. Dorothy Jewett, Area supervisor, and Miss Ruth Ann Hayes, Home Management Supervisor, have been in Charlevoix County for two weeks, Thursday and Friday of this week, a meeting will be held at the Court House in Charlevoix at 10:30 a.m. for the purpose of explaining the project to many women who have been designated as managers. FAVOR EMBROIDERED MATERIALS; SHEER WEAVES MUCH IN DEMAND

INTEREST in embroidered materials has been running high among women who have enjoyed the vogue of that something called the "feminine" to the minds of those in New York fashion circles, and a summer silent on crepes and handkerchief linens. "Makes Good" Without Hands

Bell, Calif.—If the same determination displayed by Charles (C. M. B.) Bennett, thirty-four, veteran of the World war, in refusing to allow the loss of both of his hands to be an insurmountable handicap, is shown in his administration of the post office, that office is due for an enviable career.

Mr. Bennett has admirably mastered his duties as postmaster here despite the fact that only a few months of waiting for governmental red tape to untangle the hopelessness which arose from the stupidities of a then militant hatred to serve in that capacity. The appointment was overthrown recently by the courts.

A member of the First Division Mr. Bennett was among the first to reach France and served three-fifty months before he received the injuries which deprived him of his hands. He was in a raiding party, he said, out to destroy a nest of machine guns. As he went forward, a grenade in each hand, he was knocked to the ball explosives of a heavy barrage and both of the grenades exploded with terrific force in his hands.

After his discharge from a war hospital to this country Mr. Bennett said he resolved he could not allow the loss of his hands and forearms just below the elbow, to wreck his life, and he took up those hardships to continue his usefulness which arose from his high standard. Sometimes he would stay up until one or three o'clock in the morning practicing and he will learn to row boats with the hooks every day.

He drives a machine without any extra appliances or devices, short to

By WALTER TRUMBULL

Greater New York is divided into five boroughs. According to the latest census reports, Brooklyn, Queens, Richmond and the Bronx have gained in population while Manhattan has lost. The loss is reported as 18 per cent.

There is no all-out country gentleman in this city, for whom eighteen men of us have a deep regard. He practiced to be that, for he would come back radically enough for us to make a respectable few years. Manhattan might be relatively given up to the business that would all would be brought in from outside to furnish food and clothing. He thought this would especially be true if there were developed adequate to the point where they could land on small

Officers do not agree with this theory. They think that the workers of New York will some day rise to a point of social consciousness and demands exercised on the top of tall office buildings. They think those things will be a natural development of the street, social theories and all kinds of things under the sun. That time may be high, with perhaps all workers the widest safety to business.

Airplane enthusiasts talk of the time when city New Yorkers will rise and arise away from the city, coming

Stabbing Affray.—As we go to press an affray took place in Susquehanna on Thursday, between Jo Jenkins and Hugh B. Miller Esq., in which Jenkins was severely stabbed. Miller Slaughter and the young wounds are not thought to be mortal. The general impression with Mr. Miller was attempting his arrest as an officer of the peace. Jenkins and another man, whose name we could not learn, were also arrested.

A Dashing General of the Confederacy.—Gen. Morgan, who was killed in Sullivan county, Indiana, recently, on the night of the 4th inst., was a dashing general of the Confederacy. He was a native of Kentucky, and about a year ago, with a force of 2,000 men, crossed the Ohio river, and marched through Indiana and Ohio, capturing and destroying property to the amount of millions of dollars. He was finally captured, and sent to the Ohio penitentiary, where he was confined for a time, but was finally released on parole.

"I am glad you adjourn the house of nations one day," said an old gentleman. "Fire is a lovely institution."

"Yes, and a mighty useful one," the boy added with a grin. "That's one reason why."

"3 LIVE GHOSTS" STAGE HIT, NOW A TALKING FILM

Among the broadway hits to have been acquired by the movies for reproduction with sound is "Three Live Ghosts." The famous comedy drama, on screen manifestation of which will be on exhibition at the Palace theatre beginning Tuesday, Wednesday, July 29-30.

Free from the confining shackles of the stage, "Three Live Ghosts," which when originally produced had for the central setting of the interior of "Old Weatherbee's" home in New England, will be presented in various backgrounds including the famous Scotland Yard and Liverpool Police Headquarters, the mansion of a millionaire yacht, the shores of White Plains, the transcontinental World War front during the heat of battle, and London town at the time of the armistice celebration.

Committed upon an "alibi" to the nation's prison when it began its last year of death, for raiding "Rum Grenie" as had to be considered by prosecuting attorney and a retired police captain. The Frederick House is not remembered to the tasty scenes of Mai Malone, the landlord, and other dramatis who are adorning the dialogue to the one medium has been acquired by the movies. Joe Brown has himself of a comedy role of unfortunate, as does Claire Windsor, beautiful and willing. Under his supervision the production has been directed by Alfred Santell, who has among motion picture actors, such stage training made him an ideal director.

While as a play "Three Live Ghosts" had but a mere handful of characters in the cast, the screen presentation required a cast of more than 40 people, as an audience day are to have been vividly reproduced in the large cafe, introduced in the dramatic scenes. Cinematographer Thomas Almond, the camera work and lighting of the picture.

The comedy of the play suffers nothing through these changes. The comedies and comedy situations of the original are retained in the action as it unfolds from act to act, and even adds expenditure of money to advertise popular stage successes, has invested much in the large cast, introduced much dramatic interest. Cinematographer Thomas Almond, the camera work and lighting of the picture.

Facts About Osborn

Grant Nelson, Gaylord, was found to indicate in Detroit number of Republicans widely acquainted for their broad views and accomplishments. He is an L. L. D. of right to six degrees; member of leading clubs in Chicago, Milwaukee, Washington City; was a journalist and publisher of distinction in Indiana, Michigan, and Wisconsin, and governor in 1917-1921. He is the author of many books and treatises and is by far the greatest living orator of the last century and lived in every country in the world, and is a member of many literary, historical, art, scientific and engineering organizations and societies and almost. Also in addition to his executive and administrative abilities, he is a man of energy, of his vigor and energy of an age of half his age, due largely to his continuous from a cyclone of every kind, and in his life in the open. If he goes into the Michigan campaign, rash, indeed, will be the man who dares to enter him on the stump, for Osborn is probably the best informed living man on general topics, economic and political forces of the day. His tongue is ready and in his oratory, as terrible as a mountain torrent.

Another, and perhaps the greatest element of the Osborn strength is his ability to make friends and hold them. His nature is direct, approachable, sincere, and absolutely loyal to his friends and hold them. His nature is direct, approachable, sincere, and absolutely loyal to his friends and hold them. His nature is direct, approachable, sincere, and absolutely loyal to his friends and hold them. His nature is direct, approachable, sincere, and absolutely loyal to his friends and hold them.

All For Osborn

Such is Chase Salmon Osborn, every inch a man, and without a duplicate. There was but one Johnson; and, later, a poet "spilled" that heaven had made but one such man and broke the die in molding Sheridan." The third great military is this splendid American from Michigan. To the cumby of states permitted, Georgia would cheerfully stuff one more ballot box, with a hundred thousand votes, and send it up to Michigan at the psychological moment; and every ballot would bear Osborn's name. Not that he will need them, but because if he is to be Georgia's third senator, we want a hand in the victory.

LAVISH SETTINGS IN THE NE? DICK BARTHELMESS FILM

When "Sons of the Saddle" was started, First National officials decided that this fine Lasch story deserved authentic production, colors. To be sure, the picture is that which years Richard Barthelmess at the Palace Theatre, Thursday and Friday continues some of the most colorful and lavish sets in the history of the screen.

The story opens with a stirring polo game between two cowboy teams. Next there are scenes of Arizona views and then a melodrama called the Red Cage. Barthelmess in the role of Sam Lee finds himself in a most modern apartment. An exciting chase follows. Then comes a scene on the stage, a scene in San Francisco Chinatown. Many dramatic scenes take place in New York's Chinatown and here, too, there is a luxurious and elaborate Chinese apartment and a Chinese barbaric banquet. Then comes a Gotham skyscraper. The story then takes the spectator to Cuba, the famous gambling resort of Monte Carlo. Here is to be filmed the Grand Prix, the most important automobile race in the world, and the Grand Prix, the most important automobile race in the world, and the Grand Prix, the most important automobile race in the world.

"Frugality Makes a Poor Man Rich"

Seneca, the philosopher of olden times, had the right idea—whether or not he practiced it is another question.

Frugality, economy, saving, will indeed raise the poor man to reasonable comfort.

Even though you may look be poor (probably are now), still you will go much farther if you save, persistently, for it isn't the amount you save that counts so much as the persistence with which you save.

MARQUETTE'S BURIAL PLACE COLUMNS MARK CHAPEL SITE

When Father Marquette died near Ludington he requested his Indian companions to transfer his remains to be shaped at St. Ignace for permanent burial. This they did, and the body was brought to St. Ignace in 1677.

When Ludington, a citizen of Ludington, left St. Ignace to establish Fort Pontchartrain on the present site of Detroit, the Jesuits immediately abandoned St. Ignace as the seat of their Continental Spiritual Empire and the mission at St. Ignace fell into disuse.

For two hundred years, since 1677, the body rested at St. Ignace. Father Marquette was discovered, and his tomb made a shrine. It is assumed that, now stands on the site. At one time a chapel auditory of the Jesuit Fathers stood here, and the foundation stones may still be discovered. Some of the old residents of St. Ignace still recall how clearly the lines of the foundation appeared above the surface of the ground.

Recently, Mackinac Island, the land on which the grave was found, was purchased by the City of Detroit, and this property decided to mark the chapel site. It consists of 16 columns of Indiana limestone. Bronze tablets are being prepared. One of these will give the English translation of the Latin inscription on the monument and the other will state the purpose of the stone enclosure.

A solemn high mass will be chanted on Sunday morning, August 3, at the transferred feast day of St. Ignacius, founder of the Jesuits, in St. Ignatius church. A civic program will be held at the Father Marquette monument at two o'clock. It is probable a navy flotilla will be present. Large delegations are expected from Manistique, Marquette and the Soo.—Republican-News St. Ignace.

At the market this fall you may find potatoes in handy size cotton bags of unique design. The Bureau of Home Economics of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, and the North Carolina Agricultural College developed this new "consumer package." One side of the bag is an open-mesh fabric through which the buyer may inspect the size and quality of the potatoes. The other half of the bag is a close weave to display the producers brand. The bag increases the incentive to grade and pack potatoes and marketing them as a graded product under a trade brand. The sacks also expand the market for the cotton crop.

SURGEON'S HIRS WANTED

While there can be no reasonable objection to the payment of salaries to the members of the medical profession for time actually employed in the performance of duties in the state institutions, there is no reason why the state should pay a surgeon a salary for time he is not employed. Many state institutions have surgeons on their staffs who receive salaries for their services, and there is no objection to this practice. But there is no reason why a surgeon in the employ of the state should receive a salary for time he is not employed. It must be remembered that the salary fixed by the state is for the benefit of whatever state has to offer, and not for the benefit of the surgeon. The field has been somewhat limited, but the attractions are still there. Under the present law, the surgeon who is employed by the state is entitled to private practice, and the state has no right to interfere with his private practice. The state has no right to say that a surgeon employed by the state shall not practice his profession outside the state institutions. The state has no right to say that a surgeon employed by the state shall not practice his profession outside the state institutions. The state has no right to say that a surgeon employed by the state shall not practice his profession outside the state institutions.

CHEAP TRICKERY

It would take a tremendous lot of explaining to convince animals and birds that they were not created for the sole purpose of furnishing sport for man. The argument put forward by sportsmen in the various states that the game must be killed in order that it may be preserved for future generations is not one which will stand the acid test of reasoning.

Another instrument in the cruelty line is the use of live birds and animals as targets for amusement seekers. The argument put forward by those who favor the use of live birds as targets is that the practice tends to develop marksmanship. Why not use inanimate objects for this purpose? Why not use clay pigeons? Why not use some device that will furnish a moving target? Why not use anything but live birds and animals? The answer is obvious. Each one of these substitutes has been tried and found wanting. The natural tendency of the sportsman is to kill. He wants the real thing. He wants the cruelty element. He wants the sport that comes from the killing of a living thing. He wants the blood. He wants the thrill that comes from the death struggle of a living thing. He wants the sport that comes from the killing of a living thing. He wants the sport that comes from the killing of a living thing.

GUNS AND AUTOMOBILES

An operative statesman in quest of anything that he can do or say that will be interesting to the voters during 1920 could not find a better subject than the one which has been suggested by Senator Ashurst of Arizona. Senator Ashurst has suggested that the state of Arizona be divided into two parts, and that the part which is now known as the state of Arizona be known as the state of Arizona. The part which is now known as the state of Arizona is to be known as the state of Arizona. The part which is now known as the state of Arizona is to be known as the state of Arizona.

KIDS ARE JUST KIDS

In this age of researches, surveys and investigations, it is sometimes encouraging to note that in most of these things are just about as certain to take somewhat different views of life. Take suspected reformers who had to do research.

For example, after an elaborate study of many school pupils by experts of Teachers' College, it was discovered that students from large families were as bright as those from small families. Also that there was no difference in the standard of uniformity among students who happened to be the eldest, middle or youngest in their respective families.

Again, it didn't seem to make much difference in the intelligence of the offspring whether either or both of the parents were college graduates or not.

All of which indicates that the average pupil is just about average, no matter what happened to his folks beforehand.

Which, again and also, is what most of us knew all the time.

CHICKEN INSPECTION

In a certain district of Colombia, South America, every chicken killed must be presented to government authorities for inspection.

This is not a health measure, such as governs the sanitary slaughter of food animals in this country, but is a requirement to prevent the chicken ex ovary from coming into unauthorized possession of any stray chickens which may happen to be found in the hotel's guard.

For in this section is located the only emerald producing territory in the southern continent, and fowls often pick up the precious stones in preference to ordinary gravel.

An American company is conducting emerald mining operations in Colombia, using the primitive methods employed by the early Spaniards, because the region is so inaccessible as to make the transportation of modern equipment too costly.

However, recovery of emeralds by the chicken method is only a minor phase of the enterprise.

THE GAS TAX—A PAINLESS OPERATION

Taxes and teeth are alike difficult to extract painlessly.

Consequently, when we find a way of reaching into the pocket of Mr. Citizen that doesn't throw him into a terrible state, let's stick to it.

The gasoline tax, which is now in use in every state in the union, is such a tax, according to a pamphlet on The Tax in the United States just published by the Municipal Administration Service, an organization conducted by the National Municipal League and the Government Research Association.

Despite the fact that 21 states have raised the tax to four cents, the motorists continued to pay and like it. At least, they show no falling off, and grinning gas station attendants testify to few complaints received.

The 'Tax gas tax, which was adopted for the first time in history only 11 years ago in Oregon, is here to stay, E. G. Crawford, author of the pamphlet, declares. It has the advantage of a luxury tax in that the man who pays is afford a car and wants to use it. At the same time it produces a tremendous revenue at a low collection cost. The yield for 1920 exceeded $411,000,000, which means that the gas tax furnished 25 per cent of the total tax receipts of all the states in the union.

WHAT PRICE LIBERTY

I has always been the pride and boast of America that it is "the home of the free." But just how free are we? With one hundred thousands of federal and state laws, there is nothing of any consequence that citizens can go through a day of 24 hours without committing a misdemeanor or unconsciously violating one or more of them.

Yet, "ignorance of the law excuses no man." And yet again, not an official in a hundred is familiar with all the laws and ordinances which he is supposed to enforce.

It is time, of course, that the ever-increasing complexity of our civil relationships in a democratic republic appears to make new laws necessary from time to time. But is there any justification for the orgy of lawmaking with the inevitable accompaniment of law-breaking, which has recently been witnessed in recent years?

The most disturbing result of all this is that really serious crimes, such as murder, burglary, arson and the like are seldom punished, while the ordinarily decent citizen is harassed in his business and in his private life by a maze of laws and bureaucratic regulations which require an army of officials to enforce. And so that they are not enforced.

It looks as though we are paying a tremendous price for government, the principal object of which appears to be the destruction of those fundamental rights for which our forefathers fought and died.

AN OLD FAVORITE

Certain newspapers, classics are revived from time to time, and to a considerable time of them now [illegible] the records of the press" for the benefit of the younger generation, is one.

Thompson could take a worthless sheet of paper, affix a pawn on it and make it worth $65,000. That's genius.

Some men can sign a check and make it worth $50,000. That's capital.

The government can take an ounce of silver worth 54 cents and coin it worth $1. That's money.

A mechanic can take material worth $15 and make it into watch worth $50. That's skill.

An artist can take a 50-cent piece of canvas, and paint a picture on it worth hundreds of dollars. That's art.

A merchant can take an article costing 75 cents and sell it for $1. That's business.

A girl can kiss a kid for $0.00 but prefers one that costs $20.00. That's vanity.

The author of this can write a check for $5,000, but it wouldn't be worth a cent. That's tough.—Exchange.

A JOB FOR A GENIUS

Government in business means inefficiency in business.

In a recent address, Edward N. Hurley brought up some interesting facts regarding the shipbuilding industry when controlled by the government during the war. He stated that, at the most conservative estimate, the industry was at least 25 per cent less efficient after the government became responsible for wages than before, and that at least half a billion dollars could have been saved by private management operating with the same men on the payroll.

A genius who could invent some method of getting the profit motive into governmental operations, excluding graft, would be worth hundreds of millions a year," according to Mr. Hurley. "As it is now, there is absolutely no incentive for economy in government service when increases his efficiency and no adequate punishment for the one who lets it slip."

Employes or executives of a private business are responsible to directors and are in direct competition with other businesses all seeking to cut costs and lead their field. The job of a government employe is a life position. Once upon that standing ability, his upon position. It is widely known that the American people have time and again insisted that government restrict itself to governing and leave business where it belongs, in private hands.

JUDGE URGES NEW BANKRUPTCY LAWS

Judge William Clark, of the United States District Court, Newark, New Jersey, believes that one of the greatest drains on American business is the bankruptcy situation. In an interview in The American Magazine Judge Clark points out that in 1920 there were 57,240 failures which cost $800,000,000. This amount, he says, was practically a total loss. He adds that three-fourths of the failures could have been prevented.

Our bankruptcy laws, continues the Judge, permits us to help those who have failed through no fault of their own fault. But this class is comparatively small, and he believes that the bulk of the failures fall through inefficiency or willful diversion of funds for speculation or extravagance should not be rescued. We must prevent inefficient and dishonest men from getting back into business, taking if possible for them to "try their luck" again as many do now, says Clark. "In England the business man who does not keep proper books is regarded as a criminal. If he goes bankrupt he cannot be absolved of his debts. He is barred from the world of commerce until he makes restitution."

THE NIGHTMARE OF INDUSTRY

The San Francisco Chronicle runs a timely cartoon entitled "Turning Economics into Politics." It shows the problems of labor, government, capital shopping from relief, flood control, tariff, railroad regulation, and what not, with Uncle Sheaf, tax problems and Boulder Dam going to, in a great heap on the dome of our law-making factory. Out of the side of the building come a mass of square packages labeled "Politics."

The Main Street tourist was greatly impressed by the subway in Rome.

"Hey, what a nifty stadium," he enquired. "Where's the college?"

"I am sorry I married you," sobbed the bride.

"You ought to be. You cheated some other girl out of a mighty fine husband."

"There are no dumb people, my boy."

Now that President Coolidge is getting a good many dollars a word for his daily newspaper articles we can all understand why he has been saving his language for a rainy day.

Private Detective "Graft"

New York.—Americans, in spite of their predominant air of zeal for personal liberty and fair play, are the most spying and quiet-loving people on earth. Time is the essence of a live, up-to-date organization and with it, too, the "snooper" the spy or the bright private detective is a valuable asset in the private system of business in the American country.

Mr. Mr. Parker Whitehead, chief and part-time owner of the world-famous detective agency bearing his name, is the most prominent of the private detectives in the country. He is also a very smart person and it was he who first made the "graft" out of it. He's grafter for a good many years. Until 1909, when he was thirty-one, he was in the employ of the Pinkerton agency. Then he left and started out for himself. He has been busy ever since.

Mr. Whitehead believes that there are two main things necessary to success in the detective business. One is a thorough knowledge of human nature and the other is a good memory. He says that he has never had to write down a single fact in connection with any of the cases he has handled. He has a memory for faces and for names that is positively uncanny. He says that he has never had to refer to a memorandum in order to recall the name of a person he has met, no matter how many years before.

I mentioned casually during the course of our conversation that I had once had my picture taken in connection with a newspaper story. Mr. Whitehead said that he remembered my face perfectly and that he would know me instantly if he should see me again. I had my doubts about this, but I was willing to give him the benefit of the doubt. Two years later I met him on the street and he greeted me by name. I was astonished that he should remember me after so long a time, but he explained that he had seen my picture in connection with the story and that he had made a mental picture of my face.

Mr. Whitehead's memory is not confined to faces. He has a wonderful memory for names, addresses and telephone numbers. He says that he has never had to write down a telephone number in order to remember it. He has a memory for numbers that is positively uncanny. He says that he has never had to write down a telephone number in order to remember it.

Now I am not going to say that Mr. Whitehead is a genius, but I do say that he has a wonderful memory and that he is a very clever detective.

The manner in which Mr. Whitehead has made his fortune is interesting. He has made it by catching people who are trying to get away with something. He has caught them in the act of stealing, of cheating, of lying, of deceiving, of betraying, of swindling, of forging, of counterfeiting, of robbing, of murdering, of doing all the things that people do when they are trying to get away with something.

He has caught them in the act of doing these things and he has made them pay for it. He has made them pay for it in money, in time, in liberty, in life. He has made them pay for it in every way that they could pay for it.

He has caught them in the act of doing these things and he

At the recent annual school meeting there were sixteen citizens present—a dozen and four only, who thought enough of our schools to devote an hour to them. When a village matters is called to nominate village officers, or a notice is posted for a township caucus to pick out a township ticket, the hall will be packed and the good citizens will wrangle and scrap over their respective candidates. But our schools, in which every citizen should have a lively interest—the schools in which our children are reared, and which are of more than anything else where we ought to pay our best energy are not worth mustering with. The neglect of vital public interest is criminal. Where will we wake up and attend our school meetings? It is a question, among that can only be righted by employing a man to ring a big bell at the door of every citizen on the night of a school meeting.

WILD BABIES HAUNT WOODS, FIELDS AND GAME FARMS TODAY

This is the day of Babes in the Wood, Field, and Swamp. Every where in Nature the little wild infants are coming into life as, could be shown on worthy logs, leaving to find for themselves under the tutelage of anxious mothers, and, in many cases, father too; for the Male of the Specie is as protective as the female in a number of them. The male Bob White Quail and the Californian Black Bass, for instance, make better "mothers" than the mothers themselves to any natural rate across.

"Old Mother Nature herself is aloof and abetted now by man because of conditions obtaining. She has been fighting with her back to the wall against the encroaching conditions of civilization. Man that made those conditions is coming to her rescue with conservation and protective measures," according to Carson Avery, president of the American Game Protective Association, an organization of sportsmen, publishers, doctors, lawyers, farmers, educators, scientists and other nature lovers. A large membership obtains in every state in the union, in Canada, Mexico and other foreign countries. "We have turned the latest thing in science, Electricity, to the aid of the oldest thing in the world, Nature, and today we are aiding her by artificial propagation. There are thousands of game farms in the U. S. today. On many of them wild life is reared entirely by electricity —eggs are hatched in electric incubators and the chicks "mothered" by electric brooders until old enough for safe liberation."

"Those who love babies—and who doesn't?" Mr. Avery continued, "can see many of these little wild babies at nearby game farms. Nearly every state conservation department has one or more such farms. And there are hundreds of private farms. Many sportsmen' clubs and private individuals are renting game for liberation to help Mother Nature, so, in all likelihood, there are some wild life babies near every town and city.

Approximately 30 million people go to the woods, mountains, lakes and other evenings of Nature every Summer. Here they will see the little wild creatures in their nativity.

"May we not urge everyone not to molest the little ones," Mr. Avery asked. Where one will come upon little wild babies that seems to be lost. Chances are they are not. The mother is either nearby or out foraging for food to feed the little ones. People, prompted by sympathy, occasionally pick up fawns and carry them out of the woods thinking the little fellows have been abandoned. In all likelihood the mother is looking on in agony, witnessing the loss of her baby, carried away by that dreaded creature, Man. Fear and instinct keep her hidden.

"Other mothers however are not so kind. Every summer land will finger a broken wing and lame leg and flutter along in front of the intruder in order to lead him away from her hidden babies. Please follow her and get out of the anxious area. After you have done so, the mother will take wing and fly away, and by circuitous route, return to her hidden brood.

"And by all means, be careful of fire while in the fields, woods or mountain, for a gasp, blurb or burst fire will destroy unwanted numbers of babies in the world within a few minutes, to say nothing of many parent birds lost. It is an act of cowardice to be careless with fire, particularly at this time of the year when this is the Day of the Babes in the Wood, Field and Swamp," he concluded.

Many young persons can remember when the first oil well in the United States was drilled. It produced 20 barrels a day. Now we produce more than 1,000,000 barrels a day. Now we produce more than 1,000,000 barrels a day. Now we produce more than 1,000,000

Rats Scent Danger and Flee From Poison Trap

Rats can smell poison in the food they consume. The sensation is not caused to the offensiveness of some substance, but to a sensation on the nerves of a combination against the rat organism. This is shown in experiments held by the London Zoological Gardens. Some rats were given a dose of poison and others were not poisoned under identical conditions. Every rat was given exactly the same food. Every rat subsequently showed signs of illness, but only those that had been poisoned had any desire to die. Only those that had been poisoned showed the symptoms of illness that happened to the rats.

Recently, people reported there a few days before that poison was held shown experiments of rats were more wonderful than of rats following the rats. The rodents were a little than others and suffered from the poison. When the first victims of the "experiment" was examined they all showed signs of illness, but the rats that had been poisoned had died, though the surviving rodents are not yet poisoned.

Farm Loss by Spraying

The destruction of the apple has been caused by the attack by some insects to the use of the chemical sprays. The government has been trying for years to find a combination with the sticking factor to which spray is applied, but which will not injure the fruit or foliage. It has been found that a combination of sulphur and lime has the desired qualities. The exact amount of sulphur and lime necessary to be used in any region will vary according to the climate, altitude and the character of the soil. The proper proportions of sulphur and lime for the Pacific coast region are not yet known.

Wonderful Bridge

The Natchez bridge is in itself a unique object. Although it was built by the Natchez Bridge Co., it has been in the hands of the Natchez Bridge Co. for the past 50 years. It is a unique bridge in that it is the only bridge in the world that has been built without any supports in the water. SCENIC PLAYGROUNDS OF AMERICA

By G. M. WILBOURN

Enchanted Keyholes of Glacier Skyline

A SPECTACULAR trail highway that links the six special alpine playgrounds of the globe was completed this summer in Glacier National park, Montana. Together with the eight-mile Garden Wall route already finished, this new High Line from timberline zone northward makes 170 miles of mountain crests available to visit on foot or horseback, and gives the United States a unique scenic playground to the Canadian border given the final touches of America at last, a thrilling ride across the continental divide is now not more than a day's journey from any point in the country.

Many mountain trail trips have a definite fishing theme often inferior to the finish of a complete meal of golden trout, those basin or lowly timberward alpine lakes-dainty, with only the tenderest of meat on the pinnacle where snows have corralled a three-months' fish supply against its depletion by the angler, the sight may make the onset of that romantic appetite precursor to the mere of triumph we call by those fine, dainty.

Glacier hikers already enrolled for a considerable climb may make the Garden Wall trip to Granite Park chalets on St. Mary lake (seven hours by automobile from Belton) this week to Monday, or Tuesday morning to avoid a very long first day's journey. Starting after the pack on the west side Sunday, and ride the steep northern slope to Granite park with little much than an hour's rest. This will be the remaining eight miles of easier trail and a

"TAMING OF SHREW"

FAST-MOVING COMEDY

When a beautiful girl counters a legitimate proposal of marriage, uttered by a handsome young man with such a statement as: "I'll get three hanged," things are bound to happen.

And happen they do in "Taming of the Shrew" which comes to the Fulton Theatre as the feature attraction next Friday and Saturday and likewise brings Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks to the screen together for the first time.

From the opening shot to the final fadeout, "Taming of the Shrew" is just one long, glorious laugh. From the first moment any bit stubborn Petruchio (Douglas Fairbanks) lays eyes upon his bride-to be, the stormy, temperamental Katherine (Mary Pickford) there ensues a battle of wits and wills. Lasting her fiery temper and intrigued by her defiant remark "I'll see thee hanged!" Petruchio sets about unceremoniously to tame the Shrew. To make things more complicated, he employs the very tactics that are in the engagement ring "without" throughout all of Italy. How she resists, and how the ultimate victory is worked out could only be told by Shakespeare.

The screen story of the Bard's immortal comedy, however, is said to be a delightful affair, and that is the Wild West will be presented each afternoon and evening in front of the grandstand.

Taylor succeeded in retaining all the hamstrung which characterizes Chautauqua's work, and yet enhanced the scope of her play through the medium of the motion picture screen.

Those who have seen the "Taming of the Shrew" declare it to be a delightful picture. They say that Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks are very well cast in the leading roles, and that the support given by the remainder of the cast is excellent.

STATE FAIR STUNT

ONE FEATURE THE RIDING OF WILD BUFFALO

Riding wild buffalo, a stunt never before seen in Michigan, will be a feature to be presented at the Stampede, in connection with the Michigan State Fair, August 31 to September 6, according to Carl Frank Hoffa, arena director, who is now in Detroit completing arrangements for the event.

Of all the sports or stunts of the wild and woolly west, riding buffalo is probably the most dangerous and the most rarely presented, owing to the difficulty in obtaining three animals for them are less than 5,000 of them in the entire American continent.

Riding wild buffalo is a stunt which tests the nerve of any cowboy or cowgirl. Only an expert can stay on the back of one for the 10 seconds required to qualify. In riding wild buffalo, the beast is herded into a chute, the cowboy climbs on his back from the top of the corral fence. The horses is lifted and the animal plunges out into the track. He rushes a large forward then digs in for a sudden stop and hurls his massive body with the cowboy clinging to his shaggy mane. Usually the cowboy is thrown from the beast's neck within a couple of seconds, leaving the buffalo to be rounded up by other cowboys on horseback.

The Stampede will be presented each afternoon and evening, except Sunday of Fair Week, the Fair starting Sunday, August 31, with a special concert by Creatore's Concert Band and continuing through Saturday, September 6.

LAKE MICHIGAN TAKES A TOLL OF THREE

ONE A LOCAL RESIDENT, SAM HAMILTON, AND TWO WERE PETOSKEY CITIZENS

SAM HAMILTON ABLE NAVIGATOR OF LAKES

Sam Hamilton, the Charlevoix member of the trio, was one of the long time residents of the city and well known throughout this region, especially by boat owners with whom he had had business contact for a long term of years. He was familiar with the streams and lakes in this territory, including Lake Michigan. He was by profession, a builder of boats and ships of the smaller size. He was considered as an able man when it came to handling a ship of any size as well as a competent navigator, while the Shogun "Dutch" Ford, was one of his favorite, strong personal friends, of long standing and his heart and pleasure to assist in any way possible. He was also considered as a jovial sort of fellow, in the grounds. Features will be the address by Prof. E. E. Anthony, talk by Mr. W. D. Burrington, demonstrated by two dairy club members report of last year's Contest Association, awarding of ribbons to our leading dairymen, and the judging of some 30 head of our leading Guernseys.

No matter what breed of cattle you are interested in, we are very hopeful that you will bring your family, as well as a well filled lunch-basket and spend the day with us. Let us make this a real County Dairymen's Picnic, and one never to be forgotten.

COAST GUARDS SEARCH FOR MISSING BOAT

Captain Smith of the local Coast Guard station was notified of the several circumstances and with members of his crew proceeded to the lake where they joined other searching parties and spent the night and part of Thursday spasmodically covering the lake in the vicinity of the disaster without making any discovery of importance. Later pieces of wreckage were found, as herein mentioned, firmly convincing the searchers and general public that the ship had gone down with all on board.

Gas Boat Two Brothers Lost, Cause of Accident Undetermined

Three men one a well known local resident, Sam Hamilton, and two half brothers, Carl Bugren and Fred Lundberg of Petoskey, met death as the result of the wreck of the gas boat Two Brothers, known Charlevoix and Northport as the property of the latter, which left Wednesday night, August 6, through an accident, the cause for which is undetermined and veiled with mystery.

The gas ship Two Brothers with the three men on board cleared this port for Northport, on a business trip, Wednesday forenoon. They reached their destination safely, also later in the day, between six and seven o'clock to on started on their return trip. At this time there was nothing to indicate that disaster as death for the party of three was just ahead of them somewhere along the lost than twenty-five mile stop of open lake Michigan water between Northport and Charlevoix. To all appearances the Ark ship was functioning properly and safely, before there was no feeling of apprehension of danger as they started on their return trip by either the three men aboard ship or onlookers. There was no evidence other than that the run back to the home port would be safely and pleasantly made. The night was fine, the lake calm, a few clouds were visible and the moon practically at its full, everything at the best for a sailing trip in the night along a straight course that could easily be followed in a space of three hours.

What transpired later is largely a matter of conjecture, with the guesses of the person equally as good as that of any other person. That the little ship and the three men left Northport safely was early established. That at some point along the route the third boat was overtaken by the gale, to which all three must have their lives is positive and as a result of the battle all early members, the true cause of the tragedy is indefinite problematical and without prospect of being so entirely determined at this or any future time.

Several other ships patrolled Lake Michigan Thursday in order to help locate the missing men or find some definite clew, such as would establish the cause for the loss of the ship and life. In this their efforts were devoid of results.

The other two men in the ill-fated expedition Carl Bugren and his half brother, Fred Lundberg were from Petoskey, where Mr. Bugren was interested in a screen station and in which Mr. Lundberg was engaged as a mechanic, both well known citizens. The shore line and even the stretch of water between Charlevoix and Northport has been searched diligently constantly from the time of the accident. Early with the hope that the three men would be found alive. As the hours and days passed by this hope gradually faded and with the finding of some of the equipment and boat wreckage the day following the disaster, there were very few persons who felt otherwise than that the men were lost. Faithful friends however continued their search. Consistently day and night, always hopefully expectant that, the lake will give up the bodies of the men who lost their lives in the disaster.

A tragedy enacted in earlier years similar to the one of last week will be remembered by earlier residents, in which three men and a ship were lost off this port leaving no trace or evidence as to how or why the ship and men went down. At another time and at an earlier period three men lost their lives off this port, whose bodies were later found and brought back to this port and turned over to their relatives, there are many instances of death by drowning in nearby Lake Michigan waters. In some of these cases the bodies have been recovered in some others the bodies are not located. Hence it is impossible at this time to make an accurate prediction as to whether or not the bodies of the three men who lost their lives in the recent tragedy will be recovered.

Getting Ahead

A little country girl called at a neighbor's house. "Mrs. Smith," she said, "mother wants to know if you won't please lend her a dozen eggs. She wants to put them under a hen." The neighbor was surprised. "I didn't know you had a hen."

"We haven't. Jimmy has gone to borrow the hen from Mrs. Brown."

"Frugality Makes a Poor Man Rich"

Seneca, the philosopher of olden times, had the right idea—whether or not he practiced it is another question.

Frugality, economy, saving, will indeed take the poor man to reasonable comfort.

Even though you may not be poor (probably are not), still you will go much farther if you save presistently, for it isn't the amount you save that counts so much as the persistence with which you save.

DELEGATION ATTEND CLUB AT GAYLORD

OVER 50 CHARLEVOIX COUNTY CLUB MEMBERS ENJOY WEEK

A Mighty Army From All Over Northern Michigan Enjoyed the Event

Jumping by the interest, enthusiasm and large attendance, this year's Annual Junior Encampment at Gaylord, held last week was the greatest event on our Boys and Girls program.

From all of Northern Michigan, three hundred boys and girls came, five hundred strong. On a mighty army, bringing new contacts, new ideals and an enlarged vision. All through the week a busy program was carried out daily, including contests, demonstrations, judging, education al projects, and nature studies.

For the first time, the use of the three new buildings was possible and this made a splendid setup for one harmonious happy great group. One was used as a girl's dormitory, another as a boy's dormitory and the last as the dining room.

Can you imagine around six hundred, all seated at the same time, then you can imagine the thrill of camp life.

The feature of the week was the demonstration contests and demonstrations that were held to select the teams that win the honor of attending the State Fair at Detroit with transportation paid by the Fair Association. The best teams from each County that with each one for supremacy.

While final awards are not known for all contests, Charlevoix County has the honor of being represented by a canning demonstration team of Ruth Nelson and Mable Mosley of Boyne Falls. Their demonstration was canning of greens and chickens and was splendidly given.

Charlevoix County had thirty three club members in attendance the full week, the largest we have ever had in addition to many more who spent one day at the camp. Much credit is due Miss Nina Shearer of Charlevoix, who acted as leader of our delegation throughout the week. Following are the counties attending camp for the entire week: Dorothy Zipp, Ella Zipp, Aribelle Zipp, Marjorie Duckett, Florence Anderson, Mary Ellen Johnson, Edith Spegil, Virginia Murray and Hazel Berch, all of Bay Shore; Alice Eckland, Marie VanZandt, Rosalie VanZant, Frances Withers, Christina Withers, Bessie Straw, Edna Cunningham, Estella Cunningham, Ruth Nielson, Adolph Eckland, Channing Clarke, John Clarke, David Marbury, Clayton Smith, Carleton Smith, James Block, John Block, Robert Cummings, Marion Jackson and Gordon Cummings, all from Charlevoix; Martha Reibel, Louise Reibel and Robert Tainter from Boyne City, and Marjorie Veith of Walloon Lake.

Those in attendance for one or two days were: Red Ranney, Howard Whaling, Oswald Hosgood, Vessel Crawford all from East Jordan; Priscilla Greiner, Mary Pierce and Dick Straw of Charlevoix; Ruby Boyer and Helen Portinse of Boyne City; Hazel Mosley, Mabel Mosley, Beth Simpson, Arlene Simpson, Onata Simpson, Violet Russell, Georgina Beere, Amaryllis Belcher and Mary Shewander, all from Boyne Falls.

In addition, the Clothing and Handicraft Club members of the Marion Center School were guests one day with their leaders, Mrs Chas. Withers and John Dutcher. This makes a total of 60 club members of Charlevoix county who were in attendance. Let us hope to entertain the program.

THE WRECKAGE FOUND SHOW BOAT BURNED

That the Two Brothers was burned is evidenced by pieces of wreckage and apartment found along the east shore line of Lake Michigan between Northport and Charlevoix and recognized by parties familiar with the ship and its furnishings. That the ship burned a answer, but the direct cause, if the fire has not been ascertained, firmly convincing the searchers and general public that the ship had gone down with all on board.

The gas ship Two Brothers with the three men on board cleared this port for Northport, on a business trip, Wednesday forenoon. FIRE SEEN OFF NORTHPORT BY MEN ON SHORE

When the Two Brothers failed to reach her station at the time expected of an investigation was started to ascertain the reason for the overdue ship. Information was secured as to the time the ship left Northport, Emmet county, at a point where it was small and later in the evening two witnesses were found near Norwood, who stated that they had observed a fire, simultaneously as from the point where they were on the beach north of Norwood, but thought at the time that the fire was on the peninsula near Northport, while parties at Northport had reported a fire, in a northwesterly direction from their location and later investigation led to the conclusion that the fire was on the main land, near Norwood. Each of the parties viewing the fire saw it from a different angle, but all agreed that the fire was about 9:00 o'clock p. m.

The several events were interesting and with the several ships standing for expressway made for interesting speed in each race for those engaged in handling their speedy craft, and spectators.

There was a stronger breeze for the three Sunday, enough wind to bring Lake Charlevoix more or less choppy, when the races followed by the second and making for a more interesting event than was that of the previous day on both schooners and motor boats.

The Sunday events were attractive and there a large number of persons, estimated by fraternal associations throughout the entire north part of the state, with many in attendance from points beyond the borders and in addition hundreds of people not members of the order were entertained by the programs given.

It is probable that the coming events will surpass in every way the events just held in the past years. A large attendance is anticipated, and there is evidence that the 1930 meet 1931 is probable and satisfying to

GOOD WEATHER FOR REGATTA

CROWDS LARGE ON BOTH DAYS AND EVENTS SPLENDID

Saturday, the first day of the annual regatta was all that could be commented on except in having boat owners for passage to their racing events and also for the large number of persons who were either aboard power boats out or along the shore lines to witness the speed kings on the water. The speed kings on the water. The fleet of 24 in all, ranging from fleets to the high powered ships of the fleet, power up to 225 horse power.

In the 8 k p up to 110 k. p. the race finished with A. H. Vaught of Detroit winning and A. H. Vaught of Detroit in second place.

Ann and second places in the 150 k. p. and were by George A. Shwab, Jr., of Nashville, Tenn., and S. S. Pengelly of the Long Mo.

Charles Fox, Jr., of St. Louis, driving Fox plane over Lotus Island of Detroit in the 225 k. p. race by a small margin.

Some people save by "skimping" a few pennies here and there—and of course, savings can be accumulated by that slow, painful process. Restless CHILDREN

CHILDREN will fret, often for no apparent reason. But there's always Castoria! Harmless as the tea rose on the wrapper; mild and bland as it tastes. But its gentle action soothes a youngster more surely than a more powerful medicine.

That's the beauty of this special children's remedy! It may be given the tiniest infant—as often as there is need. In cases of colic, diarrhea or similar disturbance, it is invaluable. A cooled teaspoonful for just a few drops to ward off constipation, so does any suggestion of bad breath. Wherever children don't eat well, don't rest well, or have any little upset—this pure vegetable preparation is usually all that's needed.

Acidity

The common cause of digestive difficulties is excess acid from constant sour stomach conditions, and it burns the stomach. Something that will neutralize the acidity at the same time is ideal. Just a spoonful of Phillips Milk of Magnesia, the specialist of this digestive disturbance, will relieve almost instantly, and in a few minutes its virtue is at its height. It goes harmlessly, relief is quick, and very pleasant. All gas is dispelled, all heartburn is overcome, the whole system is sweetened. Its use is a perfect antidote for acidity. It is used in just as good (or better) form, and in just as small quantity, as a spoonful of plain water. Any druggist has the genuine, unadulterated article.

Chicago Looks Back 100 Years

Chicago in 1832. (From an old print)

Chicago in 1920

The Second Fort Dearborn.

The Third Fort Dearborn in 1860

BY ELMO SCOTT WATSON

The city of Chicago is planning to take people the other hundredth birthday and wants to show it will invite the people from all over the world to join in the celebration. Recently guessed was visitors on the site where in 1833 will be held the Century of Progress Exposition. And work on the erection of buildings already has begun. Although that event is 100 years before Chicago this year begins to look back over the century of existence. For it was on August 4, 1830 that the town was platted, the streets laid out and the first land sold.

In 1830 the total area of Chicago was three square miles of which acre. It had population of less than 500 persons. In 1930 Chicago covers an expanse of 2,000 square miles and it has a population of more than 3,500,000 people. And into only the town is host of its most amazing growth of a 1833 land dealer, Chicago is the fastest thing on city in the world. With the 100 years of progress it boasts one of the tallest, with its 1,046 feet, the Empire State of Manhattan.

The centennial program of the celebration preparations are heretofore many times the volume in area. It was historical, relief is quick, and very apparent. All old is disposed, all heartless is made over, the whole system is sweetened. Its use is a perfect antidote for acidity. It is used in just as good (or better) form, and in just as small quantity, as a spoonful of plain water. Any druggist has the genuine, unadulterated article.

And they expect to be assisted in this by the people of the whole world. It was estimated that 50 per cent of the visitors will come from outside the United States. A party of Indians for instance, so says the legend, surrounded a large village, which made its home along the southern shore of Lake Michigan, into the town and killed it. From that time on the southern part of Lake Michigan was known as the Death. You may see Kickapoo Indians at "Shantytown" engaging in the marketing, peddling of the pioneer days. That is the version of the origin of the name. Chicago as given in the publication of the American Society of Engineers.

Another version is given in the journal of a certain Jesuit missionary in La Salle expedition of 1679. Chicago is the Indian name for the wild onion or garlic that grew abundantly along the banks of the Chicago river. Marquette, Jesuit missionary, was not the first white man to visit the site of the present Chicago for evidence of this were there nearly 20 years earlier. It is believed by some that La Salle visited the place in 1670, but the first authentic records of his visits to this site was that of Joliet and Marquette who passed this way on their return trip from the expedition down the Mississippi in the autumn of 1673. Marquette returned there again in December, 1674, as his way to establish a mission among the Illinois Indians, and because of illness was forced to spend the winter there.

The next French visitor to Chicago was Father Claude Allouez, successor of Marquette, who remained there in the spring of 1677 on his way to establish the mission among the Illinois Indians. La Salle was the next visitor in 1679 and his diary is next passed this way on the Chicago portage, the short connecting link between the two great waterways of the continent, the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence and the Mississippi, made in the natural path of the explorers but so to time south it was to become the center of a great commerce and nationality and to be one of the main factors in helping on the original city of the east. As personal guest, Joutel was there in 1680 and he also returned in 1682 by La Hontan, extensive correspondence succeeded to his own account of explorers' travels.

The Chicago that was the largest fort but a settlement is interested as early French documents show, Father Du Monet, 1700-1702, wrote that he found 1600 and a few others there in 1687. In 1696 Father Pierre Pinet established a mission of the Guardian Angel somewhere on the present site of Chicago and, according to the Jesuit records, he was soon driven away and his mission broken up by no less a person than Count Frontenac, governor of New France. Frontenac's opposition was extreme, as the result of an appeal to Father Laval and the existing Jesuit power. In 1698 only to be permanently established two years later. Father Pinet's residence there is regarded as a permanent settlement, since it was his practice to spend only the summer months in Chicago, devoting the winters to 1712 to the establishment in the Illinois river or in following his charges on their annual hunt. Although some historians believe that the French established a fort there some time late in the seventeenth century or early in the eighteenth, the best evidence indicates that it is extremely doubtful if they ever had a regular fort there and even if they did it existed for only a short period. It is probably safe to say that after the mission of the Guardian Angel was abandoned in 1700 Chicago ceased to be a place of residence for white men for nearly a century.

Chicago has seen the fort at many times and one of the earliest was from the province of Indiana House. For it was the red men who were there. "The first white resident of Chicago was a negro," the name was Jean Baptiste Point du Sable. There is much romance about this man. Once supposed representative from as a native of San Domingo, while another states that he was a runaway slave from the vicinity of Lexington, Ky. It is known that he was in Chicago as early as 1779 although the time of his arrival is not definitely known. He was a resident of Michigan City, Ind. The year 1800 found him established there and for over the period of the ever, for how long he remained there is unknown. Certainly it would be not over and not to the homestead being the first settler since Indiana time down John Kinzie, the reputed "father of Chicago."

That time might be applied to one of several men, depending on what you mean by "father of Chicago." For George Washington, "father of his country" might also be called the father of Chicago. In 1784 President Washington ordered then Anthony Wayne, who had just concluded the successful campaign against the Indians of the Northwest and was preparing to make a treaty of peace with the principal tribes, the Indians a piece of land six miles square in the mouth of the Chicago river, comprising that of the southwest end of Lake Michigan, where a fort subsequently was built. This was included in the Treaty of Greenville which was signed on August 7, 1795. Washington clearly saw that this site was the key to possession of the Old Northwest and no doubt realized that if the United States government held it, then could deny that sovereignty over the Great Lakes region. Little did the empire builder that he was giving to the future city its name, for many years it was known as Fort Dearborn, named in honor of Secretary of War Henry Dearborn. It marked the end of the policy of the government which was to maintain the settlements which were made by the French and to establish new ones and a historical point also, a city of more than 2,000,000. It was Wayne and Fort Dearborn that Chicago then found their birth as modern town belonging to south French Canadian frontier was corrupted by La Salle, who had brought on, in Salle's case by Antoine Cadillac, to found more in connection with the French explorer's activities, and a third by Louis Pettie and his Indian wife. The fourth founder was Jean Baptiste Chandonnai who apparently was the half-native descendant of a union perhaps of Mr. Jacques Mere Kinzie did not come to Chicago to make it his home until early in 1804. He then assumed the role to which he had been destined by his race found combined his trading relations, which apparently were made with the Indians, father of the civilian population around Fort Dearborn.

The story of the first Fort Dearborn is so familiar to so many as to require more than the briefest recital. It was first constructed after the first by Captain Wilkinson and later by Capt. Nathan Heald, regiment of infantry. Of this Heald's outpost on the frontier was the center of an Indian country, busy on account of the constant menace of war with Great Britain on hand and how that threat culminated in the capture of August 15, 1812 is popularly known as the Fort Dearborn massacre. For on that day Captain Heald in obedience to orders received from Gen. Hull, whom not now to otherwise but to abandon the fort and distribute all property among the Indians and then march his men to safety along the Indiana line. The fourth, however, was not to be. Another and unfortunate step was taken by the Indians, who, in spite of the promise of safe conduct, fell upon the troops and massacred them. Of the 54 white men, 12 women and 18 children who left the fort, 26 men, 12 women and 12 children were killed. Of the Indians who participated in the massacre, 15 were killed. Of the Indians who participated in the massacre, 15 were killed.

HOW TO KEEP COOL

Every one loves cheap ice cream, and by the time most of us understand what it means we're complaining about the weather. Even though we haven't got time to do it ourselves, we like to watch the weather vane change, investigate the direction of the wind, and see how many cents per degree the mercury is rising. Then we all get together and tell each other about it.

Because the people love to talk about the weather, newspapers have to devote a certain amount of space to it. We, ourselves, have been saying for years that we ought to have a weather man on the staff, but we've never had the heart to do it. Where would he go, anyway, in the winter time?

Another thing, people love to talk about cool weather. They like to tell how cool it was last night, and how much cooler it is going to be tonight. Then they like to tell how cool it was the night before last, and how much cooler it was going to be that night. Then they like to tell how cool it was the night before that

Love Piracy Man Exposed as Woman

Minneapolis, Minn.—For 24 years Eva Mary Harding lived as a man because she could get better jobs and earn more money. She even married a girl to save the family honor when her brother fled to avoid responsibility. And now she has been named as the "man" who stole a married woman's affections.

The suit was filed in the shape of a divorce complaint by Edward S. Harding, policeman of Hopkins, and Jewelry against Mrs. Mathilda Hartzell, who, he charges, treated him brutally and ultimately alienated the affections of Harding, which is the name under which Eva Mary, his mate for almost a quarter of a century.

Hartzell's charges, however, also learned that the supposed rival was a woman a fact that enabled the authorities to become more exact in Mrs. Hartzell informed.

Mrs. Hartzell told police that Harding had been married to a man named Hartzell, who died in the early days of the World war. Hartzell left her with a baby girl to care for.

Mrs. Hartzell met Harding when she was employed in a restaurant. Harding was a frequent customer. Soon they became friends. Harding was employed at the time at college to help earn money for university expenses. Mrs. Hartzell said Harding always was kind to her baby girl. Finally they were married and Harding agreed to make a place for the daughter in the family. Harding told Mrs. Hartzell that he needed money to finish college and that if he could pose as a man he could get more money for his work. So Harding posed as a man and got more money for his work.

Harding was graduated from college and secured a position as a chemist in a Minneapolis laboratory. Mrs. Hartzell said Harding was very kind to her daughter. She said that Harding was employed by the city of Minneapolis for a time as a chemist.

Mrs. Hartzell said that Harding left her and went to live with her brother, Donald, refused to marry a girl who was in trouble through him, she took his place and fled her to the altar. For seven years they lived together, she said, and but even the girl's own family knew the truth until she died in 1928.

After an investigation the authorities felt that if Eva Mary chose to wear trousers and quit herself Donald there was nothing that could be done about it legally and she was permitted to go about her affairs.

WORLD'S BOTTOM DEVOID OF LIFE IN DARK WINTER

There are no polar bears or Eskimos below the Antarctic circle.

The North Polar cap of the globe is crowded when compared with Antarctic," says Willard Vander Veer, Paramount cameraman, who, with his partner, Joseph Rucker, brought back a complete film record of Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd's South Pole expedition. This picture, "With Byrd at the South Pole," will be the feature of the Palace theatre program, for Thursday and Friday, August 14-15.

MILLIONS FOR BETTER COMMUNICATION

During 1929 it is estimated that the telephone industry will spend $1,650,000,000 for extending long distance facilities. The program includes the construction of about 4,000 miles of cable.

Amazing progress in long distance telephone communication has been made since 1915 when contact between San Francisco and New York was first established. Two-thirds of the foreign countries can now be reached by telephone from the United States and approximately 85 per cent of the world's telephones can be interconnected. In a few months plan and a reasonable cost we can speak to a person in the next town or in another hemisphere.

To the Electors of Charlevoix County

It is my duty as a candidate for nomination a County Treasurer to inform you, and particularly those of you who do not personally know me, as to what I am my reasons for being a candidate and what I have done. I have lived in Charlevoix County the greater part of my life, my grandparents from Joseph City, Port Sehoolcraft 1852. After taking a set of commercial work in Albion College and entered upon active life. In 1903 I purchased a farm in Hayes Township, where I have lived fifteen years. For ten consecutive years I have been Supervisor of Hayes Township and also a member of the Auditing Committee of the Board of Supervisors. During that time it has been my duty to keep in close touch with the financial affairs of the county and I have discharged that duty to the best of my ability. The knowledge of county business gained by this experience naturally leads me to feel that I could be of some service to the people in the office of County Treasurer. I know the burden of taxation and the need of lessening that burden, economy and wherever possible. The office of County Treasurer affords many opportunities in this respect. If chosen to the office it will be my earnest and constant endeavor to perform my duties always in the interest of the people and give them the benefit of a careful and safe business policy.

I am offering my candidacy for your consideration at the Primary Election, Sept. 9, 1930. If will be impossible to see all of you personally but I welcome inquiries and am willing to have the whole matter to your best judgment.

Sincerely yours,
Howard C. Stephens.

THE THEATRE

TECHNICOLOR'S USE CALCULATED TO ENLIVEN FILM

The woman was feeling blue.
The man saw red.
He had a yellow streak.
He had a dark brown taste in his mouth.

Common usage has made these terms so eloquently expressive that every child knows their meaning. Psychologists long have recognized the unusual affinity between color and the emotional state. Recently interior decorators, designers, architects, painters, manufacturers of automobiles, cereals, typewriters, cameras and other antiliterate necessities of our modern civilization have taken cognizance of the importance of color and have been employing the manifold hues of the rainbow to market their products.

The all-talking motion pictures, too, have turned definitely to color. Next year, according to Dr. Herbert T. Kalmus, President of Technicolor, Inc., there will be no fewer than a hundred featured movies filmed either entirely or partly in technicolor.

In "The Rio," which Hippo of Broadway "On with the Show," "Spite" "Sally" and other recent productions, the technicolor process was employed principally for the sake of presenting gorgeous scenic beauty.

No Longer Novelty

But now, according to none other than Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president in charge of production of Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation, color has graduated from the novelty period in the movies and will be employed henceforth not only to create added beauty but also to convey emotional and mood. Pursuant in keeping with the spirit of the times. As such, Mr. Lasky believes, color will fulfill an important and constructive function.

Mr. Lasky put his belief into practice in filming "The Vagabond King," a lavishly produced musical romance, starring Dennis King. The production, done completely in technicolor, is coming to the Palace Theatre Saturday and Sunday, Aug. 16-17. From the opening scene to the final fadeout, color is used with the purpose of provoking in the audience a sympathetic mood in keeping with the action.

BILLIE DOVE EARNS ADDED LAURELS FOR VERSATILITY

"Sweethearts and Wives," the First National picture coming to the Palace Theatre for a 2 days, showing beginning next Monday, August 18, starring Billie Dove, reveals her true versatility.

Miss Dove, who made as a French maid, a lady transformed in a lady of means, and still later as the pretty, designing woman she role of pride pre-tense.

She proves herself a natural born detective, and a woman of instinct and courage. It is she, who in the end foils the villian and regains the jewels around which the plot revolves. It is she also, who saves one woman's reputation through quick thinking and quicker changing of roles.

She is working throughout the picture to recover a diamond necklace that has been pledged for a loan. Next year, according to Dr. Herbert T. Kalmus, President of Technicolor, Inc., there will be no fewer than a hundred featured movies filmed either entirely or partly in technicolor.

Some months ago he offered pipe lovers a free booklet on "How to take care of your pipe." And the poor chap's been buried under requests ever since.

However, we've succeeded in engaging two of Queen Elizabeth's ladies-in-waiting to help the old boy out with his mail—so don't hesitate to send for your copy. It tells you how to break in a new pipe—how to keep it sweet and mellow—how to make an old pipe smoke smoother and better—the proper way to clean a pipe—and a lot of worth-while hints on pipe hygiene.

Rejuvenation

Dr. Serge Leo Gave the Richmond surgeon, who visited among the Virginia and other methods of rejuvenation.

"Those methods," he said, "may certainly give the appearance of youth for a short time, but they are not permanent, and you soon suffer the ordeal all over again.

"One of the methods, Professor Steinach's, is the most drastic and dangerous operation, and consequently the most painful. It consists in cutting out the sex glands of the male and grafting in their place the sex glands of a young animal. The operation is a very delicate one, and some who go through the ordeal die from exhaustion.

"The second method, Professor Voronoff's, is the most dangerous of all. It consists in grafting upon the sex glands of the human male the sex glands of the ape. Many who have undergone this operation have died, and some who have survived have gone insane.

"The third method, Professor Lorand's, is the mildest and safest of the three, but it is not permanent. Those who undergo it may expect to remain young for from six months to a year, but after that they will grow old as rapidly as ever."

A serious problem has arisen which threatens to permanently shelve a being shelved by instrumentalists at New York, and to accrue to him upon the passing of his poisonous enemy until it is permanent work at the University of Pennsylvania, where Professor Roger Pierce, a specialist in the study of reptiles, has been summoned to discover and grow cultures of the bacteria which control the problem.

A curious source of profit is that of ancient oil, found in a huge deposit in Pennsylvania dating from a thousand years before the coming of Christ. The Original "Covered Wagon"

Conestoga Wagon — From a drawing by R.O.C. Darley, 1879

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON
COVERED WAGON CENTENNIAL

Which is being celebrated at vari-ous places marks the years of the 1840's as the Time of the Pony Express, the Forty-niners, the Gold Rush, and other symbols of romance.

Time Magazine selects for another volume which stereotypes the events necessary to equal a memory and which Pike's entrance, placed as important. As in the case with sources of the American people even though it still is worth the while noting Coronado, the Seattle Times and the wooded streams of the Appalachians in the East rather than across the broad plains of the Great West. For the Conestoga wagon of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, was the "prairie schooner" long before that name. Conestoga itself was a village in which there were very prominent in which existed a very definite picture former which you speak the middle Pennsylvania Dutch.

The farmed years are supposing who in the height and on the Conestoga trade, the road from Philadelphia to Pittsburgh, which was the gateway to the West on early—some feets of great settlement regions. There were not to those days, most thrifty on the cold things. Some settlers as eighteen yards of gasoline and some thousand for the western country, and were loaded with furs and skins, furs and wheat, from the West for the eastern markets, others carried furniture who were going to the new country to make it their home, and all of these homes of the days of contemporary records of all this activity there are few, and no access to had upon the wagons or their heavy all-heavy tall teams. This were so much a part of every day that they are simply taken for granted. Historian who writes that after their era was past seemed them only two main—they were also the Conestoga wagon and Hadleaves or the Pennsylvania countryside as the Rhine and confluence of the Ohio River.

Today a Conestoga wagon is a rarity, even in the part of the country. There are but few left only in museums. But formerly for all of those who cherish the traditions of things historic and romantic interest, the Conestoga wagon and the literature with was reflected in our country all the available information about this form of wagon, nothing before it, now but little to it since Conestoga was a synonym for Chattanooga.

When John Gutwaite was a boy in Pennsylvania his uncle, Wesley Kinsey, operated a big farm near Greensville in Franklin county in the Cumberland valley. After the civil war he was one of the few who kept their Conestoga and began to be brought to town on election day and on other public occasions. One of young Gutwaite's duties was to water the stock and drive in "boys," some as Uncle Wesley knew. This involved with the latter fulfilled for the boy was a great deal to write a letter about little groups in of Present Uncle's visits for and the family was the most "The Conestoga Six-Horse Full Teams of Eastern Pennsylvania, Historical" which he undertook and recently printed for private distribution.

In the preface to the book Mr. Gutwaite says: "In most of us today a Conestoga wagon is either a curiosity that any reverent wagon. But it was in its day a Conestoga wagon was a prime factor for existing conditions and the virtues type of a outstanding freight carrier that has ever been known. It served as a farm wagon and grain with the outlaw. It carried families and furnishings from its home farm to the mill or the market and brought to prominent schools, trains, schools and became nearly friends in our Conestoga wagons, business transacted and the Conestoga wagon was the carrier between the East and the West whose most George Washington had free rein."

Although the use of these vehicles were most not England, covered farm wagons, which closely resembled in New England and a few places on the Atlantic seaboard early in the colonial days, local conditions in Pennsylvania favored the primary distances between the producer and the market, which made it essential that the Pennsylvania farm wagon load twice as much as the New England farm wagon, where distances were shorter, hence the sturdier built and greater wagon required from four to eight horses to pull it—quickly resulted in the development of a distinctive type of wagon for this region. There is a curious parallelism for with the development in Pennsylvania of this instrument of empire building and that of another—the American rifle. Frontier conditions in the Keystone state necessitated a better gun for its pioneers than the [illegible] Old English smooth bore the long rifle was the result. Long Rifle, Pennsylvania Dutch rifle, Kentucky rifle, Pennsylvania rifle, Conestoga wagon, Pennsylvania German, Pennsylvania Dutch, Pennsylvania Germans, all these terms are used to designate the same people. Pennsylvania Germans, coming long with the Scotch-Irish, were the pioneers of the Great Valley of the Appalachians, and the Conestoga wagon was their home on the high seats of the Alleghenies.

Another interesting feature of the Conestoga wagon is its association with the early days of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, which was settled largely by Germans. The Conestoga wagon was a product of the Germans' thrift and ingenuity. Many of these Germans were Mennonites, Amish, Dunkers, Moravians, Schwenkfelders, Huguenots, Quakers, Presbyterians, Lutherans, Reformed, Roman Catholics, Jews, Episcopalians, Methodists, Baptists

OSBORN MAN OF WORD SAYS WOMAN EDUCATOR

Unqualified indorsement of Charlevoix, Osborn for this U. S. Senate, is made by Mrs. Hannah Russell, wife of the Grand Rapids district of Inkerman.

"He has proved himself to the voters of Michigan," she said, "Mr. Osborn as governor made it his business to give the state a business administration. I have the greatest respect for his ability as a statesman."

Mrs. Russell outlined Tuesday how women who will back the man from the floor at the primaries September 9, which qualify him to take the contest.

"Firstly, he does what he says he will do. In all her political and private career, I have found all of these women I have known in Michigan to be exactly what he promised. If he starts a thing, he finishes it. He is uncompromising in his principles.

"Second, his knowledge of the world and world affairs. That is one of the most valuable qualifications a man can take to the senate. It's going to be needed there. Thirdly, nothing underhanded about his nature.

"He will not be influenced by the pressure of any party organization. He knows other men and women in Michigan and will be guided by their opinions. I have the greatest respect for his ability as a statesman. Michigan would have had Osborn as governor for another term as an honor to the state."

HE WILL VOTE FOR GROESBECK

SO ANNOUNCES STATE TREASURER, FRANK D. McKAY

State Treasurer Frank D. McKay, an ardent supporter of Governor Fred W. Green during the latter's regime, from its first inception until results, has withdrawn his support and no longer aligned with the Green forces. Announcement to this effect was made by Mr. McKay early this week in which he states, in part, as follows: "The next governor of Michigan will be confronted with many difficult problems. It is necessary that that personal differences in congress, and that we should elect a governor with experience and ability.

"Having served on the state administrative board with Alex J. Groesbeck, I know that he is well qualified to give the people the service they want at this time. Not entertaining any "Harrison" I may have had with him in the past, I am free to vote for Groesbeck at the primaries Sept. 9."

HOW IT WORKS

One of the best illustrations of the way in which free tools may be used by thoroughfare motorists to improve their health and employment in the United States is that in the effort of the successful fight made by those interested to prevent the imposition of a tariff on crude oil or oil products.

During the first six months of 1929 our imports of gasoline increased 147 per cent. During the same period our imports of crude oil and all oil products increased 50 per cent, while our exports decreased 25 per cent.

This happened in the country which leads the world in petroleum production. While importing vast quantities of crude oil or oils, oil refineries employed many hundreds of laymen encouraged by the state and local governments but by associations of oil producers in order thereby deliberately increase the burden of crude oil and oil products. A decreasing amount of money came into the country for the purchase of our products, while a greatly increased per purchases of commodities of which we had a surplus could not find a market.

As a result of this many thousands of oil field workers, refinery employees and others whose employment is affected by the oil industry, were thrown out of work. American farmers and other workers whose employment was not more directly thus affected would have had front of reduction in their purchasing power.

Three Times Every Day Telephone Traffic Starts to Climb Far Above Normal Levels

There are three periods of the day when the telephone is used to a greater extent than at any other time. The first traffic peak comes in the morning around 10 o'clock, and this is a particularly busy hour in business sections. Then there is another traffic peak in the afternoon around 4 o'clock. The third traffic peak comes in the early evening shortly after 7 o'clock, when people are busy making arrangements and completing their plans for the next few hours.

However, there are exceptions to every rule, and while telephone operators generally have come to feel that the three greatest traffic peaks in the day are around 10 a. m., 4 p. m. and 7 p. m., telephone customers realize that they must be prepared for other peaks of traffic.

Some of these increases in the use of telephone arise out of public events, holidays, etc., and may be forecast and provided for in advance. Others come suddenly, at any time of day or night. Such unexpected peaks are caused by local conditions. For example, a sudden shower may increase telephone traffic by ten to fifteen per cent, for sudden showers occasion sudden changes in plans, and quick communication then becomes necessary. Temporary failure of train service may cause a similar jump in the volume of telephone traffic, though peaks due to these causes usually are of short duration. Extremely hot spells will sometimes increase the traffic materially, only by two or three per cent.

To meet such conditions the telephone company must be prepared at all times with an adequate operating force, but it is a tradition in the Bell System that in times of specific stress, where the conditions causing the peak continue for some time, as in the case of blizzards, serious fires or floods or protracted periods of hot weather, operators who are off duty will come voluntarily and offer their services. This has occurred time and time again, and undoubtedly in cases of public calamities where human life and property are at stake.

FANNIE BRICE SINGS, DANCES AND CUTS UP IN NEWEST VEHICLE "BE YOURSELF"

Fannie Brice, the former Ziegfeld Follower star and "Fanny" Follies comedienne, is a butterfly, a "nitwit," a night dancer and a society girl in her new starring and singing picture for United Artists "Be Your self," which is to be shown at the Charlevoix theatre Tuesday and Wednesday. Played by an all-star cast including Robert Armstrong, known for his Broadway ring battles in "It Got So" and Harry Green, famous stage star of "Potash Hartmuth" and "The Kreutzer," the film tells the story of a nit-picking night club entertainer who lost her heart to a pugilistic girl and sang him ballads till an honeymoon cured to blight their love.

Joseph Jackson, screen story writer, framed his tale out of dying fish, night clubs and heart-throbs especially with Fannie Brice in mind.

COMMUNICATION

To the Electors of Charlevoix-Lee-Kanes Legislative District:

It is my duty to answer you as far as I can regarding the issues in the present campaign for the election of representatives in the legislature. It is a lengthy subject and far more important than most people realize. The coming session of the legislature will have before it some important matters that at any time in the history of our interests are to be looked after in behalf of and each of us to take notice of things. If I am to have your favor.

I am in favor of the tax burden particularly on real property. But rapidly mounting state tax must be curtailed. At the present rate the time is not far away when too many will be unable to pay at all. It will not do to say that nothing can be done about it. At the time when the Prime occupied as a home stead, built only for shelter, when the owner raises his family and in which he hopes to pass his declining years in peace and happiness, will have a suitable exemption from taxation, whether it be a place in town or forty acres on the farm. The saying that it is cheaper to rent than to own clearly shows something wrong somewhere.

As congressional re - apportionment which will properly take care of the interior, the upper peninsula and the lower peninsula in the way of representation.

I, Amendment of the Constitution to the effect that the general election shall be held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November in the year 1930 and each 2nd year thereafter.

Shall Section 1 of Article XVII of the Constitution be amended so as to read as follows:

Section 1. The legislature shall not levy more than fifteen mills on the dollar of the assessed valuation of property in this state for all purposes except the payment of interest on and principal of bonds thereafter issued, and except taxes necessary to pay for public improvements authorized by the electors of any county, township, school district, city or village.

Shall Section 21 of Article XVI of the Constitution be amended so as to read as follows:

Section 21. The legislature shall not authorize any county, township, school district, city or village to borrow money or contract debts in any manner, or loan its credit, to an amount exceeding the income and taxes provided for such year without the assent of three-fifths of the electors thereof voting at a general election or at a special election duly called for that purpose.

The claim made by my opponent that he is entitled to a second term under what he calls the "unwritten law of the Republican party" is unfortunate. Of course, there is no such law and couldn't be. I have been a Republican all my life and have never heard of such a law. Such a law would mean that the business and welfare of the people must stand aside to satisfy the political ambition or claims of one man, who may not have made good on the job. Return to the public office, like the Roman of yesteryear, employment may be found on service and it must be earned. It is a question for the people to decide after considering both sides before voting. Furthermore if there were such a law, my opponent announced and violated it when he became a candidate in 1928 against a man who had held the office for one term in this district. Mr. Harris had served two terms in Charlevoix County alone but only one in the general district. Surely he had served Leelanau County's full one term and was entitled to one of those positions on the other seat. However, I am not concerned with bygone elections. The whole matter is for you to decide at the polls. Should Mr. Harris be given the last promise and pledge of the Republican party, and that vote unanimously sentiment, I shall be the first to congratulate him and assure him of my hearty support in the interest of the district. The only thing I am concerned in is the public interest. I have given you to understand that I am not a candidate because of any personal ambition, but because I believe I can render some service. There is very much legislation that is needed and is going to be needed. Some of the legislation now in force is not satisfactory and needs amendment. If I can be of any service to you in the interest of the district I shall be glad to do so. The duties of a legislator are many and important and require the best thought and attention of the man who is elected. I am not a politician and have no ambition to be one. I am a business man and have been in business for many years and have had some experience in handling men and affairs. If you think I can be of service to you in the interest of the district I shall be glad to do so. The duties of a legislator are many and important and require the best thought and attention of the man who is elected. I am not a politician and have no ambition to be one. I am a business man and have been in business for many years and have had some experience in handling men and affairs. If you think I can be of service to you in the interest of the district I shall be glad to do so.

Respectfully,

A more just share of highway construction. In the past six years but three miles of concrete pavement have been laid here on this side of M-66 while about ten times as much on the eastern side. This is a matter that should be looked after in behalf of the interests of the people of this district.

Joseph Jackson, screen story writer, framed his tale out of dying fish, night clubs and heart-throbs especially with Fannie Brice in mind.

COMMUNICATION

To the Electors of Charlevoix-Lee-Kanes Legislative District:

It is my duty to answer you as far as I can regarding the issues in the present campaign for the election of representatives in the legislature. It is a lengthy subject and far more important than most people realize. The coming session of the legislature will have before it some important matters that at any time in the history of our interests are to be looked after in behalf of and each of us to take notice of things. If I am to have your favor.

I am in favor of the tax burden particularly on real property. But rapidly mounting state tax must be curtailed. At the present rate the time is not far away when too many will be unable to pay at all. It will not do to say that nothing can be done about it. At the time when the Prime occupied as a home stead, built only for shelter, when the owner raises his family and in which he hopes to pass his declining years in peace and happiness, will have a suitable exemption from taxation, whether it be a place in town or forty acres on the farm. The saying that it is cheaper to rent than to own clearly shows something wrong somewhere.

As congressional re - apportionment which will properly take care

AN ANNOUNCEMENT FROM FRANCE

It is announced that, due to the increase in motor accidents in France, provincial telephone exchanges will be kept open on Sundays and holidays and to a later hour on week days. This will seem a strange announcement to Americans who are accustomed to 24-hour telephone service every day of the year. However, in France the telephone system is government owned and operated and in the past service has not been provided from small centers on Sundays and holidays.

This is a striking illustration of the difference between government operated industry and industry which is controlled by private initiative and enterprise.

GUERNSEY SHOW AND PICNIC BIG AFFAIR

27 GUERNSEYS EXHIBITED AND JUDGED

The third annual Guernsey Show and Picnic held at Boyne Falls Saturday, attracted a large number of farmers from all sections of the county. Over 75 sat down to a real picnic dinner at noon on the beautiful Young Park that East Jordan has well in front of and did they eat, you know.

Headlining the program was the address by Prof. E. L. Anthony, Head of the Dairy Dept., Michigan State College. His discussion of the dairy situation and other dairy topics was authoritatively received. His remarks were well chosen and given in language that all dairymen know.

The next feature was the awarding of diplomas to some 22 dairymen who have herds averaging over 300 lbs of butterfat as shown by the cow testing association records.

Boys and Girls Club Work comes in for its share of attention when Carleton Smith and Rodger Cummings gave a demonstration on "Fitting a Calf for the Show." They showed the proper manner of clipping of every hair, polishing of the horns, blanketing, washing, and training of the calf as preparatory steps before entering the show ring.

The show itself was the best yet held in quality and extent. Guernsey folks have the display indicates that real progress is being made by the Guernsey breeders of Charlevoix county and that in a very few years there will be a large number of high quality Guernseys owned by many dairymen.

The show was judged by Prof. Anthony in his very capable manner and attracted fully 150 people around the ring. The outstanding animals of the show was owned by Wesley Bliss, of East Jordan. This Guernsey was 5 years in age and a splendidly built purebred.

"COVERED WAGON" ORIGINATED IN THE EAST, NOT THE WEST

The Covered Wagon Centennial this year has fixed more firmly in the mind of the public than ever before the prairie schooner as the symbol of the settlement of the trans-Mississippi West. Yet the fact is that this form of transportation was a product of the East and not of the West.

For it was Pennsylvania which gave to the nation the original covered wagon and in the Conestoga valley of that state there was developed more than 150 years ago a vehicle which became famous as the Conestoga wagon and which played an important part in the early history of our nation. In this issue of The Sentinel appears an illustrated feature article by Elmo Scott Watson which tells of this little-known bit of Americana. Be sure to read "The Original Covered Wagon" in this issue.

SAD TRAGEDY ON LAKE CHARLEVOIX

One Life Lost, Other Endangered When Boat Capsized

Out of the sad tragedies on Lake Charlevoix was recorded Wednesday just after the noon hour, when a small flat bottom boat, propelled by an outboard motor was struck by a wave, capsized and threw seven persons into the water, and young Paul Bonsper who owns and operates the Dance Pavilion pleasure resort on Grand Rapids, the scenery covered most the Lake Shore in modern Europe, was drowned.

According to relations which completed the known facts it was the following items the Bible, "Wisest have I learned I have in the night, yea, with my spirit within me will I seek thee early for when thy judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness" (Isa. 26:9).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the scriptures," by Mary Eddy. "Spirit is eternal, divine. Nothing but Spirit, Soul, can endow Life. For Spirit or more than all else. Because Soul is immortal, it does not exist in mortality" (p. 335).

SCENIC PLAYGROUNDS OF AMERICA

Chief Mountain

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN was a man after my own heart. He was a great lover of nature, and would bring his wife and her sister and their friends to some convocation of western countryside, the chieftain of their expedition would produce for a good picnic of the Pennsylvania landscape. And in choosing between Niagara Falls and Chief Mountain, Montana, there is no question that any self of a statesman-like temperament would turn to the latter.

All that Franklin would have to do nowadays to the geographic acme would be to step into a Pullman car and head in a northwesterly direction for three days, and then change to a motor bus for the remaining seventy miles. Or he could, if he were in a hurry, fly the distance in a few hours in an airplane.

Chief Mountain, that lord among the 10,000 FEET AND MORE under which the Rocky Mountains of the North American continent are known, is the outpost of the Glacier National Park. It is the first mountain you see when you enter the park from the Canadian side, and the last when you leave it. It is a huge, lonely mass of rock and snow, rising 9,000 feet above the surrounding plains. It is the most conspicuous of the hundred mountains in the Glacier National Park region, and the most picturesque.

Chief Mountain is a landmark for the Blackfoot Indians, who have lived in the shadow of its cliffs for centuries. It is a landmark for the white men who have come to the region in the last few years. It is a landmark for the birds that migrate from the south to the north in the spring and from the north to the south in the fall.

Chief Mountain is a landmark for the geologists, who have found in its rocks evidence of the great upheaval that changed the face of the earth millions of years ago.

Another interesting feature of the Chief Mountain region is the fact that it does not have a single lake in it. There are a few lakes in the valleys, but none on the mountain itself. Fountains and streams of water are found in abundance, however, and there is no lack of water for the eye.

Where such conditions exist, mosquitoes usually become very numerous. But mosquitoes are not numerous around Chief Mountain.

Chief Mountain.

Paper Money

There is a paper money famine in Russia. The notes are printed on a special kind of silk-lined paper, which is the only kind that will stand the Russian climate. Apparently the government has not yet learned that the cheaper grades of paper, used for the foreign currency, do not stand the strain of the climate. The paper is unsatisfactory, and the notes are wearing out promptly. It is suggested that printing is to be discontinued for a few months, in order to give the factories a chance to catch up with the demand.

First American Oil Well

In 1859, Edwin L. Drake, a farmer of the New York Iron Mines, a hundred miles northwest of Pittsburgh, struck oil there. The first oil well in America was drilled by him. It was a primitive affair, by modern standards. It was only 69½ feet deep, and it produced only 25 barrels a day. But it was the beginning of the petroleum industry in America.

LIGHTS of NEW YORK

By Walter Trumbull

The Long Island home of a New York society girl was a house of mirth last night. Hilarious guests were present to celebrate the engagement of Miss Dorothy Dix, daughter of Mrs. Dorothy Dix, to Mr. Lovelace Lonelyheart, a well-known bachelor. Miss Dix is a beautiful girl, and has had many admirers, but it was generally supposed that she would never marry. Lonelyheart has had many sweethearts, but he has never been known to be interested in any of the girls.

When the guests arrived at the Dix home they found a huge sign on the front door, which read: "Gone to the Justice of the Peace to get married. Back in an hour." Mrs. Dix and Lonelyheart had left the house together, and the guests were forced to wait for their return. They were entertained by a ring of stereopticon projections which showed Mrs. Dix and Lonelyheart from birth to the present, concluding with a picture of them as they left the house.

The Secretaryship

Charlevoix County has never come to her very few Secretaries honors never yet forgave the name of any citizen for this office, but this year comes added her candidates in that of four countries of the district in favor of their favorite son, and these majorities have got been unanimous, but of a respectable character, especially in excess of what might reasonably be expected from the small population of Michigan.

Now Charlevoix County's stakes her claim, and will consider the name of one who has marched in the vanguard of the Republican forces upon every battle field, and who has been in the front rank of the battle in which the party in this county has fought so nobly for the principles which control the old Grand Old Party, and who has by fair and honorable methods won the confidence of the people of this county, and who has influence with the leaders of the party in the state, and who has been prospecting on the ground preparatory to removal.

Supt. Morton of the Life Saving Service, was here Monday on his annual tour of inspection. Capt. Morton says the Charlevoix station will be in operation early in September. He is now engaged in collecting a suitable crew.

Our philanthropic fellow citizen, Frank A. Wood, who was the author of the bill providing for building relief for men and boys that now does business in favor of his place, is now engaged in a like enterprise of large proportions. From the Macatawa celebration he finds there was money left over, and the treasurer of the resort association decided to divide it among the needy. Inasmuch as about everybody subscribed to these funds, and the drinking fountains are of general benefit, Mr. Wood asks that those funds be expended in the purchase of two more fountains. The designs show facilities for each, and hope to quench their thirst, and are highly ornamental. The remainder of both these events have remained and Mr. Wood is now only waiting for the official action of the K. O. T. M lodge to order the fountains. The money could not be expended in a more worthy or beneficial cause.

To the Electors of Charlevoix County:

It is my duty as a candidate for nomination a County Treasurer to inform you, and particularly those of you who do not personally know me, as to who I am, my reasons for being a candidate and what I stand for. I have lived in Charlevoix County the greater part of my life, was graduated from Boyne City High School in 1912. After taking a year of commercial work in Alma College and general agriculture at M. S. C., I purchased a farm in Hayes Township where I have lived for several years. For ten consecutive years I have been Supervisor of Hayes Township and also a member of the Auditing Committee of the Board of Supervisors. During that time it has been my duty to keep in close touch with the financial affairs of the county and I have discharged that duty to the best of my ability. The knowledge of county business gained by the experience naturally leads me to feel that I could be of some service to the people in the office of County Treasurer. I know the burden of taxation and the need of lessening that burden wherever and wherever possible. The office of County Treasurer affords many opportunities in this respect. If elected to the office it will be my earnest and constant endeavor to perform my duties always in the interest of the people and give them the benefit of a careful and safe business policy.

I am offering my candidacy for your consideration at the Primary Election, Sept. 9, 1930. It will be impossible to see all of you personally but I welcome inquiries and am willing to leave the whole matter to your best judgment.

Sincerely yours,
Howard C. Stephens.

To the Voters of Charlevoix County

I wish to announce my candidacy on the Republican ticket for the office of County Clerk. Having been appointed to office of County Clerk in July 1926, I have given all the duties of said office faithful attention. I am unable to see each voter in the county personally as the duties of the position me from making such a campaign, but I respectfully solicit your vote and support at the Primaries Sept. 9th, and if nominated and elected I shall continue to perform the duties of County Clerk in a prompt, efficient and courteous manner.

Very truly yours,

STATE DEFICIT OF 15,000,000 LOOMS

Tax and Special taxes and fees From 1926, the last year I was in office, the total revenue was as follows.

1926	$ 92,197,346.98
1927	97,502,794.01
1928	106,251,266.19
1929	121,858,147.84
1930	124,726,661.81

There was a progressive increase each year and the difference between 1926 and 1930 is the enormous sum of $32,529,714.83 or 35.3 per cent.

Taxes Hit All Classes

"A very large part of this increase is total state revenue was brought about by increasing the general property tax levy and a 50 per cent increase in the gasoline tax. The general property tax increase fell on every one who owned taxable potential property and the increase in the gasoline tax on every owner of a motor car.

"The average increase in the general tax levy in 1928 and 1929 was $10,300,000 yearly, and when Mr. Brucker was as well aware as Mr. Green.

"The gasoline tax increased from $10,000,000 in 1926 to $23,000,000 in 1930, more than 100 per cent.

"The corporation tax has increased from $5,000,000 in 1926 to $7,000,000 in 1930.

"The Green-Brucker administration also passed the mail tax, the revenues from which have not been definitely given out.

"Now Mr. Brucker says he will call a special session of the legislature at great expense to the people of which he will not be a candidate. Had Mr. Brucker been a man of courage, as a member of the administrative board he would have refused his vote on a common stake, he must have been aware of the huge deficit he was piling up against the people and refused to approve all kinds of taxation and consequent extravagance when these subjects came before the board. As a member of the board he is charged in the record with a protest from Mr. Brucker.

Green Trying to Cover Up

"Mr. Green is much smarter than Mr. Brucker. The former saw the necessity of explaining the increase in taxes to the people, so he permitted Mr. Brucker to take the place, hoping, with his ear Friday in the governor's chair, that many of his mistakes would be forgotten and commercial for such a long time that the people would eventually forget the whole matter.

"Now Mr. Brucker must be willing to run in this place, hoping, with his ear Friday in the governor's chair, that many of his mistakes would be covered up and commercial for such a long time that the people would eventually forget the whole matter.

"Now as the results from the Green-Brucker administrations. There are more, worth mentioning. To the state-wide system of highways was constructed during my tenure of office, a few miles of roadway have been built here and there, mostly as political rewards. The building program called for an expenditure of $22,000,000 yearly, which was authorized by the governor and legislature. Last year $5,000,000 was appropriated and the new buildings and of that sum only about $1,500,000 was expended for that purpose. Where the remainder has gone only Mr. Green knows. If Mr. Brucker knows he isn't saying anything about it.

"From a building standpoint, that is highways and state institutions, the Green administration has done very little.

"Its one great achievement has been to increase the general property tax and the pleasure of spending large sums of money that other taxes have to raise with the result that we now have a deficit in the state treasury of nearly $7,000,000 and this will be increased to $15,000,000 by January 1931 when the next governor and legislature takes office.

"THE DEVIL'S HOLIDAY" IS TYPICAL OF AMERICAN LIFE

"The Devil's Holiday," Nancy Carroll's latest starring picture, which comes to the Palace Theatre next Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, is a typical American play of modern American life.

Written by Edmund Goulding, whose penchant for poignant drama is already well-established in the film world, and whose production, too, the play's action is centered in the apprehensive heart of the jilted fiancee, namely in the middle of the great wheat farming belt.

JOSEPH M. GALLAGHER PASSES

Former St. James Resident, Buried in Philadelphia, August 11th

We have just received the information that Mr. Joseph M. Gallagher passed away August 6, 1930 at the residence of his sister, Mrs. William F. Carney in Philadelphia and that he was buried Monday, August 11th. We quote the following from a letter dated August 22nd and received here August 26th.

"Mr. Gallagher's funeral was largely attended by friends, relatives, and friends as he was loved by all who knew him.

For twelve years he was a resident of St. James, living with his uncle the Rev. E. P. Gallagher, after graduating from the Philadelphia Public Schools, being his health, the doctors advised a cold dry climate, hence his visit to Beaver Island. As the doctors predicted, he regained his health, but so dearly did he become attached to his uncle and his uncle's people and they to him, that he decided to make St. James his future home.

When Food Sours

Lots of folks who think they have "indigestion" have only an acid condition which could be corrected in five or ten minutes. An effective sail-sold like Phillips Milk of Magnesia soon restores digestion to normal.

Phillips does away with all that nauseous and gas right after meals. It prevents the distress so apt to occur two hours after eating. What a pleasant preparation to take! And how good it is for the system! Unlike a burning dose of soda—which is but temporary relief at best—Phillips Milk of Magnesia neutralizes many times its volume in acid.

Next time a heavy meal, or too rich a diet has brought on the least discomfort, try—

Russian Humor Tinged by Tone of Cynicism

A sense of humor serves to mitigate an appalling feeling of despair in Soviet Russia, writes Leo M. Grossman in Current History. The new codes of law and social life the successors of Lenin, the GPU, and doomed economic conditions are fought by satirical songs and pranks—and those words used in inspiring the opposing armies.

"Why be cheerful when a third will answer the question?"

So that the accusation may not look plausible.

Childish Marvels in Arithmetic "Fade Out"

In English newspaper notes are made of the fact that the new method of teaching the Andrew Lewis wife to solve complicated problems are also beginning to be applied to the study of arithmetic. He is not the only case of phenomenal power in this direction—records like to work as a rule showing up in the early grades. Of course, of fourth grade and various competitive lessons were brought Dorothy Dodge, who was so talented in mental and as to perform almost anyone, the lessons are forgotten and was associated with Bidwell Entertainment. He was a founder of the Electric Telegraph company and became president of the Institution of Civil Engineers. Another who did not show any special ability was Sir Isaac Newton. Indeed, when he was 19 years old he did not know how to add or to count.

Promises with reservations were given very little consideration by the courts, as a rule.

Never Keep Poison Where It May Be Mistaken for Harmless Article.

Pertinent to the United States Department of Agriculture:

A man's career in writing a sulphur-arsenic insecticide instead of sulphur resulted in the death of a quarter of bugs and caused the dangerous illness of two persons on a farm in New York, an investigation by an official of the food and drug administration, United States Department of Agriculture, has revealed.

The unnamed sulphur was used in preparing a sulphur-lime emulsion mixture as a dormant spray for peach trees. This spraying is the common practice. Then the drugs was labeled with the poison were brought to market and were for sale of an arsenical insecticide for a peach tree spray. Two persons, buying arsenic and not sulphur, were seriously ill.

Used to Cure Hogs

Investigations as to poisons from official sources have thus made known that many persons have used paris green for the purpose of curing hogs of worms. Both chickens and hogs have died from eating the poison. The chicken was fed on the ground with the feed of the hogs and a fatality took. It was thought at the time that the chickens were ill or sickening.

The arsenic used in the three cases was purchased by the feed and drug establishments and was meant to contain arsenic. Tracing this arsenic would not only have solved the mystery but also have saved the lives of the hogs and chickens. The feed offering proved to be the source.

Investigation showed that the manufacturer on the assurance and those bought at the wholesale drug house. Many used as a form of arsenical insecticide. Post Bros. Co. a 5-6 ounce is safely and with safe sulphur-lime mixture. It was successful.

Three Errors Made.

Officials of the food and drug administration point out three errors in the case. A person should never buy insecticides in such a manufacturer prepared package as are manufactured by the chemical agents and a druggist or hardware dealer. Many persons buy insecticides in bulk and mix them themselves. Many persons buy insecticides in bulk and mix them themselves. Many persons buy insecticides in bulk and mix them themselves. JAMES DONLEVY
CITIZEN OF BEAVER ISLAND SEVENTY-ONE YEARS

James Donlevy one of the oldest passably the oldest and long time residents of Beaver Island passed away at St. James Wednesday afternoon, August 27, at the age of seventy-one years.

Mr. Donlevy was born in Ireland, County Donegal. In the year 1851 he crossed the Atlantic and for the next eight years lived in Toronto, Canada, when he changed his location and in 1859 landed at Beaver Island, where with the exception of a few years spent in Chicago, he has since resided and until comparatively recent years was engaged in many varied pursuits, either holding a clerkship or conducting a business for himself.

In 1862 he accepted a clerkship with George B. Peckham, owner of a general store, leaving this position to engage in business under the firm name of Boyle & Donlevy, eight years later. This partnership was dissolved some years later, Mr. Donlevy retiring from the business. For the succeeding five years he held a position as clerk in the store of John Day, when he entered a partnership with Neil Gallagher, his interest being taken over two years later by his partner. For almost ten years following this he lived in Chicago, where for about six and one-half years was cashier at the Great Northern Hotel. Returning from Chicago he opened a general store at St. James which he continued until 1926 when on account of advanced age retired permanently from active business pursuits.

During the early years of his residence at Beaver Island the territory formed part of the county of Manitou, long since abolished, since which the Island has been attached to and forms a part of this, Charlevoix county, and it was during the Manitou County period that Mr. Donlevy was for a term of years, one the county officials, first as Judge of Probate and later County treasurer, both of which he filled satisfactorily to the public and credit to himself.

Mr. Donlevy was held in high esteem by his business associates and the general public. His business transactions were conducted honorably, and his life in its entirety, was such as to win and hold the esteem of his every acquaintance.

Arrangements for his funeral services have not been made at this time and these will not be completed until word is received from relatives in Chicago and other points. However friends at St. James think that the final rites will be held Saturday at Holy Cross Church. Mrs. Earl Miller of this city, was a niece of the deceased. There are several nieces and nephews living at distant points who are the nearest blood relatives. His wife to whom he was united in September 1874 died in 1917. Her maiden name was Miss Sarah O'Malley.

RELIGION AND PEACE

In Berne, Switzerland, this month, there is being held a meeting which will go down in the history of the world and in the annals of religion. It is a meeting of a small group of practical visionaries who will come from all parts of the earth to draw up a specific program for a World Conference for International Peace through Religion to be held in 1932.

The men and women engaged in this task represent all the major faiths of the world, and they believe that only through emphasis on the teachings of peace within every faith can a warless world be assured. Religion must outlaw war, they state, for politics and governments by themselves can never build up the public attitude that will make war impossible. The leaders in this movement for world peace through religion are people of international prominence not only in the field of religion but in business, art, and professional life.

This around the council table this month will be gathered representatives of the Christians and the Jews, the Mohammedans and the Hindus, the Confucianists, Jains, Sikhs and other faiths, to plan for a world conference such as has never been held in the history of religion.

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "A material, theoretical life-basis is found to be a misapprehension of existence, the spiritual and divine Principle of man dawns upon human thought, and leads it to 'where the young child was,' even to the birth of a new-old idea, to the spiritual sense of being and of what Life includes" (p. 191).

AN ENCOURAGING SIGN

One of the most encouraging signs of the times is the great amount of attention now being given the problem of accident prevention by individuals, officials and private organizations.

The terrible toll of fatalities due to the automobile, which last year reached the record figure of 31,000, must be reduced. Laws to keep the exceptionally reckless and incompetent from highway travel is passed in every state. Financial responsibility laws which differ from compulsory insurance in that they place the burden where it belongs—on those who cause accidents—have been tried with success in several states and are proposed in others. The drivers' examination law, said to be the greatest need, is being advocated throughout the nation.

The great majority of people are competent, careful and responsible. Their lives and property must be protected.

A RAILROAD HOUR

According to recent statistics, in one hour the railroads earn $716,580 from transportation service, and spend $514,586 for operating expenses, and give $45,588 in taxes to state, national and local governments. In an hour, 6,026 cars are loaded with revenue freight and 86,932 passengers board trains.

The American railroads provide a great public service on which every social and economic activity of our people depend, and are giving the best transportation in the world.

Between 1926 and 1929 the average daily mileage of each freight car increased 29 per cent; the length of the average freight train and the load carried increased 32 per cent and 14 per cent, respectively; average freight train speed increased 28 per cent. Car shortage have been practically eliminated.

SCENIC PLAYGROUNDS OF AMERICA

By G. M. KILBOURN

Eternal Ice

Still amazing variety of the natural wonders appearing in western North America in nowhere more strikingly displayed than in our contemplation of natural resources of perpetual ice and apparently unconquerable boiling waters.

Millions of Americans know of the fantastic geyser, Firehole Lake, near the Mammoth Hot Springs and the Monroe Mesa, and other tremendous park wonders which constitute item of pulling power in the thousand cross sections every day of the year, in the lightning carriages of the Misses Washburn and the motor stagecoach. Thousands of the men and boys visiting in the park have known of the new Glacierist project, a journey of discussion of the summer of 1926 which gives the visitor access to a group of the finest of the mere fourteen glaciers which, notwithstanding the hostility of the public to the cold, are still in existence in the United States. And a remarkable possibility of it is that the Glacierist project is from the summer playground standpoint the most important development since the creation of the Yellowstone park system. Not only will it bring the glaciers and the Canadian Rockies within motoring distance of the Yellowstone park, but it offers visitors to nearly all of the Northern Pacific system the opportunity to see the Rockies from the motor car, and to see them in the most favorable season of the year.

Glacier park is the only one of the national parks which has been developed with the motor car in mind. Its roads are not the equal of those in Yellowstone park, but they are good enough for motor car travel, and the scenery is unsurpassed. It was the discovery of the Glacierist project that the Rockies could be visited to the best advantage by motor car that led to the development of the Glacierist project. The Rockies are lower than the Sierras, but the Sierra Nevada mountains on the coast are more conspicuous, and appear to be higher than they are because they rise from the sea level. The Rockies are massive in general, a part of the main mountain system of the continent, and consequently are hidden from view. Approximately to the boundary of the park's western entrance the Rockies are not conspicuous and do not impress the visitor. But a motoring party which leaves the main line of the Great Northern railway at Belton station, the western entrance to the park, and follows the Belton-Kalispell road, will see the Rockies in their most favorable setting. There is definitely and steadily increasing interest in mountains. The popularity of mountain climbing is shown by the fact that the Appalachian Mountain club has enrolled by thousands. Some societies in the Milwaukee area. The Lisbon country is easily accessible from the eastern states and via Pacific coast and Canadian points is reached by the Northern Pacific railway and Canadian Pacific railway. The Glacierist project is marked by Belton, Coram, Kalispell and Columbia Falls, in the Flathead Reservation valley some miles south of Belton station. It is reached by the Milwaukee road. The Lisbon country is easily reached from the eastern states and via Pacific coast and Canadian points, is reached by the Northern Pacific railway and Canadian Pacific railway.

Motoring touring is given a definite new impetus by the Glacierist project, and the motor bus service which has been established in connection with the project is the most popular method of transportation in the park.

It is great satisfaction every one who has visited the park to learn that the Glacierist project is to be developed. Many of the visitors to the park have been disappointed in the past because they could not see the glaciers. Now they will be able to see them, and to see them in the most favorable season of the year.

Recall "Enoch Arden" Tragedy

Owen Sound, Ont.—A true life story, exceeding in morbid tragedy that of Tennyson's "Enoch Arden," is revealed in a petition sent to the Ontario house asking for a divorce on the behalf of Harry Lafayette Dales, secretary formerly of Barrie and Owen Sound.

Stationed in life imprisonment for murdering a horse trader more than a quarter of a century ago, Dales is now pleading for liberty so that he may marry and children here desire to see him again before his death.

If his plea is granted Dales will return to his former home, as did Enoch Arden, to find that his wife in the long months, has married another. Furthermore, she declares that she has never legally parted to Dales; that he himself left her after a bitter quarrel, while he already had a wife living, and later deserted her and their four children.

The former Mrs. Dales, now nearly forty years of age, is now Mrs. Harry Bennett, and she fears that she has petitioned for the release of her murderer, or that she will commit, to see him. If he is liberated. She declares, in fact, that the Harry Dales who tricked her into a supposed marriage, is dead, as far as she is concerned.

"He disappeared and I heard nothing of him for ten years," she declares. "On those grounds alone I would have been able to remarry, even if we had been married legally in the first place; and I learned later that we hadn't."

Mrs. James Rockwell, Dales' daughter, who was five years old when he disappeared admits that she has no friendly to provide a home for her father if he is released from prison, but declares that she will hopeful to avoid publicity in connection with the matter. She does not recollect her father's misdeeds, but she clings to the prayer "forgive as our trespasses as we forgive them that trespass against us," and she declares that a quarter of a century in prison may be sufficient atonement for many misdeeds.

To the majority of Owen Sound residents Harry Dales is only a name, but a few old residents of the city remember him as "a likable young fellow," and a man of many loves. A woman who pleaded on his wife was tried for murder with him in Nebraska and sentenced to forty years in prison. She subsequently became insane and died in an asylum. But she was not Dales' wife, either.

Church Bell Has Long History

Hyannis, Mass.—Carefully guarded in the fireproof courthouse of Barnstable county in Barnstable, stands what is believed to be the oldest church bell in the country. It is 177 years a bright green, the church bell in the duke of county, 1675, along with the county records, and the county seal. It is the oldest in the country.

The bell is nearly twelve inches across the mouth and stands about twenty inches high, not counting the yoke by which it is suspended. It is cracked in several places, but is still in good condition.

The story handed down by word of mouth is that in 1675 a ship commanded by Captain Peter Hallett was lost off Nantucket, and all hands drowned. The people of Barnstable gave the bell to the county as a memorial. That was over the objection of the colonists, however.

Time it was used as a church bell and then, finally, as the county bell. From there it commenced the shifting events of the revolution from the battle of Lexington onward and returned its place until the outbreak of the Civil war. Then it was put in a vault, as the bell was saved and was hung in the present courthouse when it was built.

Every so frequent century some one who sees "things" in the Fourth of July, rather swells the loudness of the "it was cracked." If then was placed in the law library for permanent preservation.

Every Orchard Offers Different New Problem

No two orchards are alike in regard to their soil, and the necessity of adapting the common fertilizers to the individual orchard is apparent. Experiments have proved of interest for years and have been carried on in many sections. The results of these experiments are available to all who are interested.

Many orchards are in need of lime, and this is easily applied. Lime may be applied in the form of ground limestone or burned lime. Burned lime is more quickly available, but it is more difficult to apply. Ground limestone is cheaper and is more easily applied. Lime should be applied at the rate of one ton per acre every four years.

Nitrogen is the most important element in fertilizers for orchards. Nitrogen is the element which produces growth. Nitrogen is the element which produces growth. Nitrogen is the element which produces growth.

Every one knows that the Fourth of July celebrations in Hamburg, Mass., are especially marked by the ringing of the old bell in the courthouse cupola. It is the duty of the sheriff to ring it, and he does so with a will. Those who are closest to the court house on the night of the celebration usually go to bed very early, and then the sheriff is left to ring the bell alone. So he has to be careful to time his ringing so that he will not be arrested for disturbing the peace. It is said that the sheriff has been arrested for disturbing the peace.

HARVESTING FRUIT TO INSURE PROFIT

Careful Handling of Crop Is of Vital Importance.

Net profits from a crop of apples may be seriously reduced by the methods used in harvesting the fruit. Careful handling at this vital period is important if the fruit is to reach the market in good condition.

Ladders are necessary if the trees are large, enough to keep any quantity of fruit, says M. C. Gardner, pomologist at the North Carolina State college. The three-legged combination ladder tree and picking bag now being used in many orchards is recommended for use in harvesting. Picking or picking bags should be used. Tree picking has many advantages over shaking or jarring the fruit from the trees. Only mature fruit should be used. Tree picking has many advantages over shaking or jarring the fruit from the trees. Every apple should be handled with the greatest care to avoid bruising. Bruised fruit will not keep well and is not attractive in appearance. Fruit should be picked when dry, as wet fruit bruises easily. Fruit should be picked when dry, as wet fruit bruises easily.

He Presses a Button and the Worms Come

Kenny Ina—Under fishing seems to the fish as the worms do. Earth worms that up the ground may be half with a pole and line as an attraction, crawl to the surface. Fishermen, however, have found that by pressing a button on a battery they can cause the worms to come to the surface in great numbers. The method is simple. A pole is driven into the ground a few inches from the bank of a stream. To the top of the pole is attached a battery. A wire is run from the battery to the pole. The other wire is run from the battery to the ground. When the button is pressed the current flows through the ground and causes the worms to come to the surface.

THE STORY

Blind Thetis and Howard Bellingham take Richard Wade and old college chum, Alfred Gibbons, for a cruise on the yacht. Wade makes a written pledge taking up the three at college to help free Alfred of debt, explaining that he needs financial assistance for his engagement to Bellingham's daughter Mary. Gibbons agrees to make a start for the Orient in his organization. Mary Bellingham, Howard's fiancée, is wealthy Sebastian. Blake Wade was sailing at Gibbons' office as steward. Mary is asked to marry her employer's cousin and refuses. Bellingham is ordered by doctors to recover from the effects of exhaustion. Mary, as his secretary, has brother to accompany them. Wade is employed by Gibbons, and takes aboard Bellingham's yacht. His effects are found by Gibbs, a fugitive from justice, who draws from the safe in Bellingham's cabin, and then tells he has found it. Wade is questioned by a man known as Hallett, who is in charge of the yacht. Hallett intends to hold Wade as an accomplice unless the latter will help him get the money himself. Wade refuses, and Hallett says he will wait until the yacht is out of sight of land before he will tell the captain. Wade is then told that Hallett is a fugitive from justice, and that he has been in charge of the yacht. Wade is then told that Hallett is a fugitive from justice, and that he has been in charge of the yacht.

"She'll pay!" Bellingham thought it would seem well if he made no comment on the matter. He had already a great deal of money to him. He started on his career of journeys by sending at the rate he would gladly have avoided.

"It was Mary Thetis was really thinking of. I propose these expenses on the head of Mary and Margaret. Margaret was studying for like a baby's appetite she had never tasted, and was constantly complaining of her digestive troubles. I shall speak to Mary about it myself."

Sayer and Bellingham experienced the sense of relief so familiar to people who have been in the habit of living with others and entered the daily routine of their own companionship with a sense of freedom. Both were inclined to be silent, and they were content to be left to themselves. Bellingham was a man of many moods, and Sayer was not the only one who found it difficult to keep pace with them. Sometimes he would be in the highest spirits, and would talk and laugh like a boy; at other times he would relapse into a state of gloom which was positively alarming. Sayer, who was himself of a cheerful disposition, could not understand this latter mood, and was inclined to think that it was assumed for the purpose of impressing him with the importance of his employer. But he soon found that this was not the case, and that Bellingham was subject to these fits of depression, which he was powerless to control.

Sayer was not long in discovering that his employer was a man of strong will and of a very determined character. He was not accustomed to be thwarted in anything he undertook, and he had the habit of getting his own way in all things. Sayer soon found that he was no exception to the rule. Bellingham had taken a fancy to him, and was determined to keep him. He would not hear of his leaving him, and when Sayer, after a few days, mentioned that he must return to London, Bellingham refused to listen to the suggestion. He would not hear of it, and he would not hear of it.

"I'm not going to let you go," he said, "and that's all about it. I'm not going to let you go, and that's all about it. I'm not going to let you go, and that's all about it."

Sayer was not sorry to hear this decision. He was not sorry to hear this decision. He was not sorry to hear this decision. He was not sorry to hear this decision.

"I'm not going to let you go," he said, "and that's all about it. I'm not going to let you go, and that's all about it. I'm not going to let you go, and that's all about it."

FORTY YEARS AGO

R. W. Tulloch and wife left yesterday for the Detroit exposition.

On Saturday Mrs. J. W. Oatley of Kalamazoo, visited a very much loved friend, Mrs. Fred Simmons, who resides on the corner in Fox's store and enjoys the same.

Mrs. A. McNeil and Mrs. A. J. Milmont of this place, attended the funeral of Angus Cameron at Traverse City last week.

If the parties taking that suit of clothes and glasses from the counter in Fox's store will return the same, no questions will be asked.

Mr. D. C. Graves, his young daughter, Annie, and his sister, Mrs. L. P. Eddy, of Grand Rapids, are here for a few weeks.

Last Sunday morning at 3 o'clock, Frank Hines and Harrison Bedford, left overland for Petoskey. They caught the 8 o'clock train north, breakfasted at 8 on Mackinac Island. They spent the day hunting it about among the sights, and left at 5 p. m. across the straits, arriving at Petoskey in the "shank of the evening," where they filched up and drove home and were ready for business on time Monday morning. It was their first visit to the Island.

Charles B. Bellinger, the pioneer painter, has vacated his Bridge street premises, and moved his stock to a back street—the building recently vacated by Smith, the tailor. This change does not mean that Charles is on the down hill track, as the bare statement might intimate, but has it compelled to vacate a Bridge street store to give the contractor a chance to move it back a few rods for a new building. It will be 16x24 feet, 2Sx36, and will be pushed rapidly forward to completion.

Catholic Matters

Monday was an important day for the Catholics of Charlevoix and for the Catholics of Grand Rapids, arrived in the morning, accompanied by Rev. Fox Schmidt, Ignatius and Bruno. At 8 o'clock mass was celebrated at Jefferson Hall, after which the clergy and many congregation started for the lake to bless it. St. Mary's Catholic church, whose fine interior embellishment and decoration were celebrated and the sacred duties of the new house of worship held by the Bishop, assisted by the attending priests.

A Narrow Escape

At about ten this morning, a Weidman boy from the resort, took a row boat and went to Lake Michigan in the high sea that was running, and into which even the steam yeri did not venture. Of course he capsized, but clung to the bottom of the boat. An older brother saw the thing and went to his rescue. He, too, capsized, and the two of them were being buffeted by the waves about 40 rods outside the pier ends. Some fishermen put out in a row boat and started after them in a downhill. He took off the younger boy and landed him safely. The big Martin took off the other. They were both badly frightened.

The G. A. R. Reunion at Boyne City a Memorable Event

The Charlevoix delegation to the County Soldiers' and Sailors' Association Encampment at Boyne City left town after the noon closing of the 20th, with the shriek of the whistle and the rattle of the dinner.

On the way up Pine Lake all the songs in the old book were sung, and a few of the echoes of the war were told, making the trip a very enjoyable one.

We reached Boyne City about nine o'clock, and were marched to headquarters, where we relieved our hunger, and thus, until noon it was good-acquaintance. The East Jordan delegation arrived about then, and were escorted to headquarters. From there the line was formed and led by the Charlevoix band (which was marched to the rink for dinner—and such a dinner. To be appreciated it must be tasted. The way we stories went the game things disappeared, and when those who attended it were satisfied there.

After dinner a couple of hours we pleased until evening, when, after dress parade, a supper that rivalled the dinner closed the day. The night opened with an excellent entertainment, and when we wished we could have stayed until morning, reason had disregarded the contrivance that of the United States and lulled us to slumber upon the people in a time of profound peace. Thus a majority of the boys in blue slept right well into the homes of the good people of Boyne City. Those of the boys who remained all night had a live ly time and three suppers during the night. Along three o'clock in the morning they turned out with the drums and made things lively in the town.

After a breakfast that equalled the dinner and supper, a feature not on the program was introduced. Chaplain Wm. H. McCartney, of the Cadet G. A. R. Madison, Wis. H. [illegible] and Wm. Wm. W. Cass.

A vote of thanks was rendered to everybody and the people of Boyne City in particular, and the Association adjourned with cheers for the old flag and the ladies of Boyne City.

To the Electors of Charlevoix County:

It is my duty as a candidate for nomination a County Treasurer to inform you, and particularly those of you who do not personally know me, as to who I am, my reasons for being a candidate and what I stand for. I was born and raised in Charlevoix county the greater part of my life, was graduated from Boyne City High School in 1912. After taking a year of commercial work at Albion College and general agriculture at M. S. C., I purchased a farm in Hayes Township where I have lived fifteen years. For ten consecutive years I have been supervisor of Hayes Township and also a member of the Auditing Committee of the Board of Supervisors. During that time it has been my duty to keep in close touch with the financial affairs of the county and I have discharged that duty to the best of my ability. The knowledge of county business gained by this experience naturally leads me to feel that I could be of some service to the people in the office of County Treasurer. I know the burden of taxation and the need of lessening that burden wherever consumption, low yearly depreciation, and low cost of upkeep.

A FINAL WORD TO THE VOTERS OF MICHIGAN

Saginaw, Sept. 2nd.—For approximately a third of a century it has been my pleasure and privilege to campaign in the State every two years and exchange view with the voters. Advancing years confirms that it is best to conserve my health and energy comparatively I am contented to give you my opinion and will be glad to hear from you with yours.

As to the Senatorship. My experience of 24 years in the National Capitol makes me hope that I am more or less qualified to suggest the kind of a man Michigan should send to represent her in the United States Senate. With any kind of an administration, but especially with a Republican, such as we now have, it is absolutely essential that Congressmen and Senators work in accord with the President and Executive departments, otherwise we relegate ourselves, and thus, until now Michigan was unrepresented. The East Jordan delegation arrived about then, and were escorted to headquarters. From there the line was formed and led by the band (which was marched to the rink for dinner—and such a dinner. CANARIES SING IN "LET US BE GAY"

"Tuning" canaries for interior scenes, "mixing in" suburban traffic steam shovels and barking dogs, and shooting "walking-talking" scenes were just part of Robert Z. Leonard's job when he directed Norma Shearer in "Let Us Be Gay," the new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer starring vehicle which will open Sunday at the Palace Theatre.

The extraordinary scenic effects imposed when the breakfast room sequence in the last part of the picture were being filmed. To add cheerfulness to the sun-streamed room, Leonard had several canary cages placed about. When the scenes were recorded, however, the chirpings of chirping was not only discordant but quite disconcerting.

She—Yes, why?"

He—"I just wondered who lifted them off the stove for you."

DOROTHY MACKAILL'S FIRST COLOR FILM IS "BRIGHT LIGHTS"

The legion of admirers Dorothy Mackaill has mustered, particularly since talkies introduced her voice in "The Barker" and "The Captive Woman," will rise her in her latest picture "in her true colors." She will be seen in a technicolor film.

The picture is "Bright Lights," a First National special dramatic film with music and dance numbers incidental to the romance and drama surrounding the behavior of a celebrity from a musical-dancer.

Seen in natural color films, Miss Mackaill not only gets the full benefit of her typical English ruddy complexion, blue eyes and blonde hair but she takes on a very becoming reminiscent characteristic of the Technicolor film, which lends depth and a stereoscopic effect.

Frank Fay, Noah Beery, Daphne Pollard, Jessie Mavers, Tom Dugan, Inez Courtney and many other favorites have important roles in "Bright Lights," which Michael Curtiz directed. It was written directly for the screen by Humphrey Pearson, author of "Via With the Show."

"Bright Lights" will be the feature attraction at the Palace Theatre Friday and Saturday.

Typewritten school work commands highest marks. Royal Portable Typewriter is a key to success. F. V. Tyler.

DEPARTMENT OF CONSERVATION EXHIBITS AT CHARLEVOIX COUNTY FAIR

A department of conservation exhibit, carrying with it a great display of wild live animals, native to Michigan, will be shown at the Charlevoix County Fair this year.

The local fair is one of the 27 at which the exhibit will be shown this year, although more than twice that number of applications had been received.

In addition to the wild life display which will include from 20 to 30 species of native animals and birds, the exhibit will include displays of a large variety of Michigan furs, cultivated game and other hunting and fishing equipment.

Starting with exhibits at last two or three fairs a year ago, the popularity of these wild life exhibits has increased remarkably until now the Department of Conservation finds itself physically and financially able to accept but a portion of the applications received each year.

All of the animals shown in the wild life exhibits were captured in Michigan, most of them by conservation officers and state troopers. Among the animals to be shown at the fair grounds will be wolves, coyotes, porcupines, badgers, foxes, bobcats, fawns, bear cubs, mink, squirrels, muskrats, and among the birds, Canada geese, ducks and pheasants.

For the first time in their lives, many of the people of this county will see a real live mink, a live raccoon or a living badger.

It is were not for the little signs over each cage there would be few people who could readily identify all of the animals shown in this exhibit of wild life, according to those who are in charge of the display. The mink is mistaken for everything from a skunk to a weasel.

Fawns, cub bears, wolves, beaver and porcupines are usually readily identified, it was said, but the lesser known animals, despite their prominence in various parts of the state, are often mistaken for something else.

In addition to its wild life display the Department has a large booth filled with a variety of confiscated furs, guns confiscated from law violators, and a mass of hunting and fishing equipment that was once used illegally.

Those in charge of the exhibits are constantly answering questions concerning every angle of conservation.

A small folder outlining the 1930-31 game laws is being distributed at the booth.

PETOSKEY BUSINESS MAN DIES VERY SUDDENLY

Albert Fochtman well known throughout Northern Michigan and for many years prominently identified as a representative business man at Petoskey, where he was manager of the Fochtman Department store, died at an early hour Friday morning following an illness of several weeks that afforded no hope. Mr. Fochtman had shown signs of improvement physically for some days, hence his death came suddenly, causing a shock to family members and a large circle of acquaintances all of whom considered that he was showing steady improvement and that he was on the way to complete recovery. He was born October 15, 1873 at St. Marys' Pennsylvania and with his parents, came to Petoskey where he has since resided. Mr. Fochtman is survived by his wife, two daughters, his mother and several brothers and sisters. The funeral service, held Monday forenoon, was attended by several Charlevoix friends.

VIOLATIONS OF GAME LAWS FOR MONTH OF JULY

According to the last report from the Department of Conservation five violations of the game law in the month of July in Charlevoix county. Two violators in Emmet county paid $24.10. Four in Cheboygan paid $76.60. In the entire state there were 471 convictions, in which fines aggregated $8,912.27 and jail sentences amounting to 815 days given to offenders. In addition several rifles and shot guns were confiscated.

SPECIALISTS WILL JUDGE AT GAYLORD

TOP O'MICHIGAN POTATO AND APPLE SHOW

J. R. Livermore, Extension Specialist in potatoes, at Cornell University, Ithaca, New York, has been engaged to judge the potatoes at the Eighth Annual Top O'Michigan Potato and Apple Show at Gaylord on October 29th, 30th and 31st, according to R. E. Mellencamp, Secretary.

Mr. Livermore will be assisted by H. C. Moore, potato specialist at the Michigan State College.

Mr. Livermore is recognized as a national figure in potato work and the Show Association considers itself fortunate in securing him for this show. It speaks well for the Top O'Michigan Show to have him accept this invitation to judge.

Since the Show began in 1923, judges have been secured from New York and Minnesota twice and once each from Pennsylvania, Ohio and Wisconsin.

B. A. Hostman, specialist in Horticulture at the Michigan State College will judge the apples. Mr. Hostman judged the apples at the Show two years ago and apple growers will be pleased to see him return.

All three of these judges will appear on the various programs during the three days of the Show.

ITS LIEUTENANT SHANAHAN NOW

It is Lieutenant Shanahan now, according to information received here recently. Former Ensign Edward Kim Shanahan son of attorney and Mrs. Lisle Shanahan was promoted to a lieutenancy and sworn in as such Monday, August 25th at San Diego, California, as Lieutenant Junior grade. For the present he is stationed at San Diego Airport naval base. The promotion carries with it a nice increased salary and certain other valuable perquisites incident to his new rank.

Three, used in a long white ivory holder, contribute to the creation of a severe character, according to Dorothy Lloyd Bacon. The woman who smokes long cigarettes is unusual, and black ones add an exotic touch.

The countess is a born hunter. Lacking animals or a living to hunt, she concentrates on men. She does not want the man for himself, just likes the thrill of hunting, the joy of the final bagging. It is an impressive characterization as developed by Mae Francis.

MUCH NEEDED RAIN FRIDAY

A greatly needed refreshing rain storm visited this region early Friday night. It was of short duration but water fell freely for about one hour. The storm, though moderate, left a lot of good and was welcomed particularly so, to agriculturalists all of whom have been damaged by the long continued drouth of past weeks.

First, unsatisfactory heating menaces the health of the whole family. Second, there is a danger that the heavy cost owing to some defect in the heating plant and burn down the house. Mr. Anderson's records in the legislature has been outstanding. He has done a splendid job. Political stamp, legislators opposing his activities every session. He has brought consistently for legislation that he thought should be enacted and equally hard against bills that a disinterested judge would vote for but the loser interests of the State of Michigan and more particularly District which he represents.

It was Mr. Anderson's duty when taking the floor at the psychological moment and taking advantage of a technicality, knocked out a bill put through sinister forces by legislative adjournment, which would place any policeman and firemen in progress at the expense of the State of Michigan.

Mr. Anderson has been able to meet all issues as they arise—like made no promises. He never hesitated over anything voted and, if mistreated and elected, will return to the Legislature with no specific promise on the one pledge, which is carried out, viz: To represent the people to the best knowledge of the Constitution of Michigan and the Constitution of the United States and to vote for legislation that in my judgment would be for the best interests of the people

Third Officer and Medical Examiner Mike Grosser with an unsavory reputation for drunkenness, is assigned to the Albatross, a tramp steamer, for the voyage to Buenos Aires. Mike's only friend aboard is Second Officer Todd, who is in love with Captain Bellington's daughter Mary. Mike is attracted to Mrs. Bellington, a beautiful woman who is unhappy with her husband. Mary is engaged to Lieutenant Hallett of the British army. Mike and Mrs. Bellington are caught in a storm and are marooned in the lifeboat. Mike is injured and Mrs. Bellington nurses him back to health. Mike tells her he loves her and she admits she loves him. Mike is rescued and returned to the ship. Mrs. Bellington tells Mary that Mike is a hero and that she loves him. Mary tells her father that Mike is a drunkard and a coward. Mike is ordered to his cabin by the captain.

CHAPTER IX

Bellington States His Terms

Arthur Bellington sat with eyes on desk, his head resting on his hands. The commanding air which had so long been known on the seven seas was gone. It took that cool customary look, which was to reappear, would not be established by the captain's own, but the manner of the tolerant old friend with the kindly eyes and the tired voice. They belonged to Bellington, but not the Bellington of the bridge and the saloon table.

"If we do get back to New York," he said presently, "how are we going to account for Hallett's murder?"

"Murder, sir?" Mike looked up.

"Murder, I said. Hallett was murdered by one of the crew. Which one I don't know. But I know that Nicova is on the Pacific coast, and I know that we are almost sure to go through the Panama canal. Some under the command of the Colonel Shaw. Hallett can walk in anytime and accuse Nicova."

"I don't like that Andy, either," said Mike. "He's a bad egg. I think it is a different fish. Nobody could blow a whistle like that. He's a bad egg, at least. He said the paper wasn't to be opened for a year. Is willing to take a chance on it all with money and a set-off to Mrs. Bellington. Andy's got to be the murderer, and I shall be sure when I get back to New York. Andy's got to hang."

"Andy will not hang," Bellington said. "Andy will not even be charged with the murder. Andy will be dead."

"Dead, sir?" Mike looked up.

"Dead," Bellington repeated. "Andy will be dead before we get back to New York. Andy will be dead before we get back to Liverpool. Andy will be dead before we get back to Buenos Aires. Andy will be dead before we get back to Timbuctoo. Andy will be dead before we get back to Hades. Andy will be dead before we get back to Heaven. Andy will be dead before we get back to Hell. GROESBECK COMES TO BERRIEN COUNTY

St. Joseph, Mich. — One of the strongest letters supporting Alex J. Groesbeck for Governor appears in the St. Joseph Herald-Press of August 18. It is written by L. Benjamin Reber and in it he points out the necessity at this time of getting a strong man in the governor's chair to correct the failure of the Green administration.

The letter follows:

Editor, The Herald-Press:—

Thomas Governor Alex J. Groesbeck came to Berrien County today and thus created a town. Just for every mayor in Michigan has become on for more than that. It furnished a striking proof that, in the final analysis, the people will be trusted to discern right from wrong, and a most vivid contrast from the lengthy days of ten years ago.

Then no was a wonderful glory also assumed on every side as men from pursuing for his partisan ends blood. Then he was fighting a real defensive fighting, with desperate desertion by those who had professed courage in a losing fight. Then he was putting issues, surely and calmly his governorship before the people and did not hold up to scorn, accused of dangerous spread of trusts, accused of criminal dealings with the public enemy. Then he had barely a corporal's guard of followers who leaped to the defense of the state's record in all the affected acted, production against the enemies of the foe. Then the people went to their self-unbending to gathering in indignation and fighting in determination to stamp those with an air of his disapproval which chilled the heart of the mighty warrior. Then he was the wolf who pretended to be the grandmother of the innocent Little Red Riding Hood from whom back came to Berrien and, oh, what a contrast!

The scene, the kind and genial elimination of the peasant right name to Canadian Chatham, came to be a herial by an enthusiastic cavalcade of devoted followers, rather with an air of conscious triumph than that of the full knowledge that they had proved him right when he asserted that his administration was one of the best in the history of the state.

This time he came on the official sion, with nothing to defend, for the Green administration which had so bitterly assailed his political rival on those same points on which unemployment exchange and unemployment extravagance and inefficiency of the voter who had scorned him four years ago?

"This time they were glad to path, or quickly and taken in respectful mood, silent dismay, interest and outspoken approval the while the mighty warrior demonstrated the foolish extravagance, the bungling waste, the orgy of spending of the old administration which has repudiated his leadership. The people wanted a change.

"Yes, we wanted a change and surely we got what we wanted. We changed from economy to extravagance, changed from efficiency to inefficiency, changed from a real executive who gave his entire attention whole honestly to affairs of government to a spoil lover who used Furniture, etc., genuinely old, a bara his power to advance the welfare of full. 823 Kalamazoo Ave., Petoskey. 14-tf

STATIC DISCHARGES DUE TO DRY HOME AIR

Heating Plant Humidifier Eliminates Cold Weather Electric Shocks.

Many people have been frightened by electrical discharges from their hands or other parts of the body upon contact with radiators, electric outlets switches or even other persons. Although there is a slight sensibility of shock and a crackling accompanying these discharges, they are harmless, according to the Holland Institute of Technology at Holland, Mich.

These family electrical discharges are generally experienced during the winter heating season, especially on real cold days. Technically they are known as electrostatic charges. They accumulate in the bodies of active persons when the air has a low humidity, the percentage varying from 10 to 30 per cent. Persons who are active in all of this low humidity zone are prone to be afraid of other persons, changes may be generated by merely shuffling the feet across rugs or carpets, and on persons contact with a ground, such as a radiator or metal apparatus a bright, startling discharge is discovered.

When conditions of this sort exist in homes and the furniture they buy ing that the home air is 6o to 65 for health or for comfort. It is then that abnormal high indoor temperatures are necessary to maintain real life comfort. Some persons find it difficult to "feel" warm unless the indoor temperatures approximate 80 degrees. Such persons are the victims of the heating systems which are overdriven to maintain the desired comfort. is unwise to entrust the installation of this important vapor equipment to any Tom, Dick or Harry.

One of the leading manufacturers of automatic heating systems of the vapor air type refuses to permit the installation of its heating plants by other than factory trained heating engineers through whom the plants are distributed and every sale and proposed installation is passed upon by the company's engineering department before those men are authorized to proceed with an installation. The company found it necessary to adopt this policy to obviate unleashing of its products by jerry-builders and others who after little heed to the importance of fitting a heating system to the home.

Poor Draft Big Cause of Heating Troubles

Don't prematurely criticize your coal dealer nor the one in turn responsible for the poor heat in your normally cozy house comfortable warm during the heating season. According to the Holland Institute of Technology, in Holland Mich., most smoking troubles are caused by insufficient draft. Before you file a complaint about poor coal, make sure that the chimney and flue pipe are not clogged with soot, and that they are in good general condition. Leaky chimneys and flues cause more trouble than poor coal. Be sure you thoroughly test combustion. Also be sure that the ash pit is not filled with ashes. It is dangerous to allow ashes to accumulate and cut off the air supply necessary for good draft.

Defective Chimney Real Fire Hazard

Annual Heating Plant Cleaning Will Reveal Flue and Chimney Defects.

Structurally unsound chimneys are an important contributing factor to the many hundreds of home fires that are characteristic of the annual heating season according to the Holland Institute of Thermology in Holland Mich. Some fires could be materially reduced and millions of dollars saved to home owners annually, says the Institute, if heating systems were given a thorough cleaning and examination at least once a year.

Defective chimneys and flues are possible sources of roof and basement fires. Due to corrosion, flue pipes within a season or two become filled with holes through which sparks of fire find their way into the basement, often lodging in the lower floor wooden structural parts. Chimneys settle, thus causing disintegration and separation of the asbestos grass cloth which surrounds the flue pipe at the joints. Through the cracks thus developed fire may and hot gases escape and fire in the roof or walls.

There is but one way which home owners can be assured of the safety and of certainty are serious trouble developing, and that is to secure them to the home. By operating the furnace with a full head of steam for a few minutes each morning the home is kept in a comfortable condition, and when inflated in the morning over which operates on the same principle as a pneumatic tire, warm air is dispersed throughout the home in just the right amount to maintain the desirability of comfort equal to the air heated by a day in temperature of 65 to 75 degrees though the actual temperature may be but one or two degrees above zero. Thus, by maintaining the air condition carries away bodily heat and perspiration, thus creating a feeling of comfort. Those persons who use the full furnace of air heating through the heating system produces indoor moisture that saves the drying process of applying heating pads.

Keep Even Temperatures

It is not economical to allow indoor temperatures to roof down than 10 degrees at night during the winter heating season, according to the Holland Institute of Thermology at the Holland Mich. This is proven by the extreme cost weather, as indoor fitting with the first touch of chilly weather.

TRACE DISCOMFORT TO UNMOVING AIR, AND NOT "BAD AIR"

Lack of Humidity Also Contributing Factor to Unwholesome Indoor Atmosphere.

Air which does not contain sufficient moisture to distract conditions conducive to general health is not necessarily harmful to human beings even though the carbon dioxide content is abnormally high, says the Holland Institute of Thermology at Holland, Mich., nor is it, thus suffering proved long the air be kept in motion.

These interesting conclusions have been verified time and again in Australian hot blast chamber experiments in which chemically pure air was used and changes in the air due to human occupancy, as far as have an relevant psychological effect. In conducting the tests, seventy persons were kept in apparently ideal comfort for eight hours in the chamber, the fresh air supplied to them containing 2,000 parts of carbon dioxide to each million parts of air, which is considered equal to the air breathed by a dog in temperature of 70 to 75 degrees though the actual temperature may be but one or two degrees above zero. Thus, by maintaining the air condition carries away bodily heat and perspiration, thus creating a feeling of comfort. Those persons who use the full furnace of air heating through the heating system produces indoor moisture that saves the drying process of applying heating pads.

HERE IS ONE WAR WHICH WAS JUSTIFIABLE

A great many of our newspapers have adhered to the view that the expedition that was to have come to the conclusion that war is never justified. Statesmen of this kind have been made with increasing frequency, all of which makes of special interest an article by Mr. F. L. Fred in the current issue of the National Republic under the caption "Waging a Justifiable War." In answering to show that war is sometimes justifiable, Mrs. Franklin cites the war of Independent Decatur, and other American naval heroes against the Barbary pirates who were committing unspeakable outrages against those unfortunate enough to fall into their hands in the stirring days of the early nineteenth century. In writing of Commodore Decatur, Mr. Franklin says:

"The gorgeous and palatial residence of William Decatur, Parsons, a grandnephew of Commodore Stephen Decatur, in declining to the Duchess of Duke Naval Academy a sword that was presented by the city of Philadelphia to the famous American naval officer, has requested himself to the exploits of the great hero.

"As one writer recently put it 'The Pirate, corsairs and pirates of Commodore Decatur remains one of the most attractively striking characters in the history of the nation. His sword very literally carved a fortune for the infant republic. Many of Germans civilization, given to the United States a new prestige which struck terror to the foes and gave the always to right, one right to trade, no country." He stirred up all nations that preyed but for a the great times he lay. It has been said by early contemporaries that Decatur's chief death is organized in the American hero rises to be dismissed as a mere fighting man. He was a man of a passion of patriotic devotion, as Decatur one might have said 'My right or wrong, my family.' The soldier and soldier is the spirit and the sailor is the spirit and the great sea captain's immortal deeds. Decatur's name is still an inspiration not only to our navy, but to fearless everywhere. The war against the Mediterranean pirates is sufficient answer to those who declare that war is never justifiable. The corsairs of those murderous sea racketeers for years ranged the ocean, killing, burning and enslaving seamen and passengers on vessels engaged in peaceful commerce. The other nations paid tribute to these pirates, in some cases with an implied understanding that they would specialize on ravaging the commerce of other powers. Decatur ignored the dones of African dungeons to many white captives of various nationalities, and rescued European women from the harems of their barbaric captors."

AND GREEN SHOUTED ABOUT GROESBECK'S PARDLES!!

That Governor Fred W. Green has released as many convicts on parole in three and one-half years as was done by Alex J. Groesbeck in four years is revealed by records of the pardon commissioner. The number is given as 4,000 persons are given up to parole on two years sentences a total of 8,000 persons. There will be granted about 1,000 paroles during the remaining 500 at a time, and the main during room for men and women. To be ratified the parole board must by a majority of five to a vote. Opposition to the parole system has grown from 1,000 feet long the figures in the world, which can and the to be viewed from as from 5,000 a day, and a mile from this vicinity of moving 2,000 a day. These will be grouped about 20 to the kitchen, which, according to Mr. Wenburg will be the most modern in the equipment and service yet put into operation in this country. WISE WORDS FROM CANADA

Advocates of unconditional compulsory insurance for automobiles would do well to read a report on the subject made by a commission in Ontario, Canada. The report strongly recommends against compulsory insurance, and favored the enactment of a financial responsibility law of the type in effect in several American states.

The compulsory insurance laws, says the report, and the financial responsibility laws differ fundamentally in one point. "While the earliest compulsory insurance required all to insure on a certain day, the Safety Responsibility laws leave a motorist alone until he has been convicted of a serious violation of the Highway Traffic Law or Criminal Law, or has caused serious or substantial injury through motor accident. This difference makes the Safety [illegible] by Law more logical, more acceptable, more workable, and less oppressive, and has the great merit of only affecting motorists who have themselves demonstrated that they are unworthy of careful drivers are untouched by the law."

Unconditional compulsory insurance, in other words, penalizes the many because of the dangerous few, while financial responsibility laws place the burden where it belongs—on those who cause accidents.

It is worthy of mention that unconditional compulsory insurance was tried for several years in Massachusetts, has been productive of chaos and injustice. It has driven insurance companies from the state and compelled the courts, while the accident rate has not gone down. In contrast to this, states with responsibility laws report they have been highly successful.

USE SUCTION TO RID HEAT PLANT OF DIRT

Giant Vacuum Cleaner Is Modern Method of Cleaning Performance.

Take good care of your home heating system keep it regularly cleaned of the soot and dust that accumulates each season, and it will render long and satisfactory service, advises the Holland Institute of Thermology of Holland Mich.

Soot and dust in the heating system not only create fire unnecessarily fire hazard, but they seriously interfere with heating efficiency when the plant is in operation. Not only that, but a dirty furnace easily introduces into the apartments dust of a nature that is clean house, immeasurable inspection and cleaning and clean walls and rugs.

To be assured of thoroughly efficient heating service, and the elimination of unnecessary household drudgery, the highest precautions is to have the heating system, including the entire set thoroughly cleaned before the fall fire is started.

It is a simple, clean job, when done the modern way. The modern way is by means of a giant vacuum cleaner that comes to the house mounted on a motor truck. This machine operates on the same principle as an ordinary household vacuum cleaner, but is many times more powerful.

It is worthy of mention that unconditional compulsory insurance was tried for several years in Massachusetts, has been productive of chaos and injustice. It has driven insurance companies from the state and compelled the courts, while the accident rate has not gone down. In contrast to this, states with responsibility laws report they have been highly successful.

'Tailor-Fitted' Heating Plant Modern Idea

"Home Hard to Heat" Often the Result of Attempt to Stoop on Furnace.

The heating system which will give the most satisfactory service is one in which a [illegible] and power unit is designed to meet the requirements of the individual home, according to the Holland Institute of Thermology in Holland, Mich.

Many home owners purchase heating systems as they would purchase ready-made clothing, that is, they select the system that appeals to them as being the best looking, forgetting that what may look the best may be so entirely unsuited to their needs as to be a source of annoyance and expense.

Any heating system, to be satisfactory, must be designed to meet the requirements of the individual home. Such a system is tailor-fitted to the home, and is the only kind that will give the most satisfactory service.

Before any heating system can be selected, the heating engineer must know the exact cubic contents of the house to be heated, the number of windows, doors, and other openings, the direction in which the house faces, the prevailing winds, and other points that will affect the heating problem.

Only when all of these facts are known can the engineer design a system that will meet the requirements of the individual home.

GROESBECK'S WAR RECORD

Published for the sake the folks county knows it, and as a subscription book (a) for the veterans. Now subscribed edged (by name) ownership of the fund.

Through a welfare appropriation he assisted the Barrie Court Charges of the Red Cross to take care of sick and wounded soldiers, during which period responsible who bought these service welfare funds there.

As acknowledgement of the state, Governor commissioned the War Preparedness Board. It placed the appointed function of soldiers on a purchase of goods and back for Michigan's allowance. It financed the field Cemetery, it advanced funds to sailing soldiers for uniforms and equipment. It assumed payment made to enlisted men $15 bond to Michigan soldiers at Camp Custer and Service to the Michigan Naval Reserve to Philadelphia.

Created for plain reason to preserve by money during the absence of the national guardsmen.

Half thousand could. Good Mr. Governor to Salvation Relief and from Detroit to Philadelphia. Total of the assistance of war soldiery.

The cost of maintaining the national administration for the Nation County of Defense were met by the War Preparedness Board.

The War Preparedness Board established a "Michigan Roster" of New York City and endeavored to put the six Michigan soldiers returned from overseas. Their soldiers were given the comforts of home, wounded soldiers and their families were cared for and through its activities suffering soldiers in hospitals were comforted and cheered.

He supported the soldiers' Salon Bill and helped frame up the soldiers' funeral assistance which would put it into effect and then fought for its passage. After it had been passed back with more a state offered a New York with the amount over the $15,000,000 before the fund, making the money could be protected. First day Thanksgiving Day was made a legal holiday to go into effect the amendment passed.

It was Governor who heard the plea of the veterans on a bitter to the suppression of the two regiments, three orphans children, who bought the land at Otter Lake were cleared and who have been the first cottages for the summer visitors. OTHER NATION'S BARRIERS

Matters of Americans will doubtless be necessary to know in view of the Governor's recent statement in which he opposing the very principle of high tariff, declaring that these products of Spain, opposing imports of Germany into their half as much per capita in trade as the United Kingdom, and Belgium, Switzerland and Holland with almost one-fourth as much per capita under the new tariff law as under the Underwood law.

The official figures of our commerce show that under the new tariff of the first six months of the year we exported to countries paying $6.17 per capita, Argentina $4.07 per capita, Brazil $4.65 per capita, Chile $20.61 per capita, Germany $5.16 per capita, Italy $4.75 per capita, the United Kingdom $13.16 per capita.

These facts are taken from official statistics which can be verified by anyone who will take the trouble to do so. Under the new tariff law, based on a system of specific duties, the average ad valorem rate will be 16.45 per cent of the value of the imports which, according to the Underwood law, would be 20.21 per cent. Some of the items of the new tariff law are as follows: Sugar, 1.76 cents per pound; Spanish olives, 35 cents per gallon; Spanish olive oil, 40 cents per gallon; Spanish sardines, 1.5 cents per pound; Italy's 15.60 cents per pound; Italy's 15.60 cents per pound; Italy's 15.60

Mountain of Lace-Work Cascades

IF YOU love waterfalls and have the time and the gift to live round them for a fortnight today, by Glacier National Park, Montana.

Glacier, like Lake Louise in the Canadian Rockies, is a type of the perfect playground. It holds the overwhelming majority of the United States' last 50 or more of the world's treasures and its inaccessible one-half is mostly uninhabited. Any person who wants to get thoroughly away from it all can do so in Glacier. Any person who wants to have a good time can have it in Glacier. Any person who wants to see the most magnificent mountain scenery can see it in Glacier. Any person who wants to see the most glorious wild flowers can see them in Glacier. Any person who wants to see the most glorious waterfalls can see them in Glacier.

Indeed, Glacier, like Lake Louise, defies classification. Almost every other scenic playground and resort has one great thing and nothing else, or else has one great thing and a number of minor ones. Masonic Hall being too small for the crowd, Lewis Grand Opera House was secured by the committee, and when Grand Patron, J. J. Beck or of the Masonic Adoptive Order of the Eastern Star, arrived he found everything prepared for his reception.

Eleven members of Petoskey Chapter O. E. S., arrived in the evening, and at 8 o'clock the Grand Officers instituted Charlevoix Chapter, with a membership of 34, which breaks the record in Michigan.

At ten o'clock the curtain was raised, disclosing two banners tastefully draped with the United States flag, the entire length of the stage, laden with viands and flowers. About 180 sat down to the feast, after which the music was opened, and the doors were shut and bar were bolted and barred.

The Order of the Eastern Star is designated an Adoptive Masonry. To it are eligible the widows, wives, mother, sisters, and daughters of Master Masons.

The following are the officers elected for Worthy Matron, Mrs. Ella Emmons; Worthy Patron, A. E. Mason; Associate Matron, Miss Carrie Hill; steward the world, yet Noah and his wife, his three sons and their wives. When I see the nine it reminds me of the nine lepers that were cleansed by our Savior. There were nine out of 10 that never returned thanks. When I see the 10 it reminds me of the ten commandments which God had handed down to Moses on the tablets of stone. When I see the king it reminds me of the great king of heaven, which is God almighty. When I see the queen it reminds me of the queen of Sheba who visited Solomon, for she was as wise a woman as he was a man. She brought with her 50 boys and 50 girls all dressed in boy's apparel for King Solomon to tell which were boys and which were girls. The king sent for water for them to wash. The girls washed to the elbows, the boys to wrists, so King Solomon told by that that."

"Well, said the mayor, 'you have entertained every one of the pack on this one.'

"What is that?"

"The knave," said the mayor.

"I will give your house a detention of that one, if you will not be angry."

"I will not," said the mayor, "if you do not term me to be the knave."

"The greatest knave I know of in the assemble, that brought me here."

"I do not know if he is the great knave," said the mayor, "but he is the greatest fool."

"When I count how many spots there are in a pack of cards I find 365, as many days as there are in a year. When I count the number of cards in a pack I find 52, the number of weeks in a year. I find there are 12 picture cards in a pack, representing the months of which in a year, and on counting the tricks, I find 13, the number of weeks in a quarter. So, you see, a pack of cards serves for a Bible, an almanac and a common prayer-book."

The subject was discharged.

FIRE IN 1930

During June, the fire loss in the United States was $21,818,266.—$1,787,897 less than in June, 1929. We have, however, nothing to be proud of, as this is the first month in 1930 in which a decrease has been recorded. The total loss for the first six months of the year was $140,049,271, corresponding to $230,092,795 for the same period last year. In short, we have so far destroyed over $90 million dollars worth of property more than in 1929.

It cannot be too often repeated that the United States has the most expensive fire loss, both total and per capita, in the world. Our exhibition in the matter of fire has become a national nuisance—and a national disgrace. Every year we sacrifice thousands of lives and half a billion dollars in property values. And, in the most conservative estimate, at least 50 per cent of this waste is entirely unnecessary.

Two factors are responsible for the waste—carelessness and ignorance. It is carelessness that allows us to drop cigarettes where we finish with them, let wiring go unattended, pile trash in corners, and the like. It should be thoroughly understood that every fire, whether or not the property is insured, represents a permanent economic loss that must be paid for directly or indirectly, by the entire community.

Our fire loss will go down when people learn to make their premises safe, when precautions in their homes and places of business and when they are willing to invest a proper amount in the simple rules of fire prevention.

SENSATIONAL GAINS IN USE OF OIL AND GAS FOR HOME HEATING

During the past five years the conversion of fuel oil for domestic heating has increased by leaps and bounds according to the American Institute of Developers of Petroleum. Michigan is one of the states for this purpose has more than doubled in four years, and is becoming more and more popular as a fuel for domestic heating, according to some authorities in the industry.

These figures tell an amazing story of progress and mean to me anything that seeks for greater comfort and convenience in the home will be open arms by the American public every time it does one more.

Many home owners whose homes are now heated with coal, the ultimate aim in mind is to convert their present heating plant for oil or fuel heating. If heating plants are in good condition and if they efficiently function as intended, they can be very efficiently fed oil or gas instead, provided the new fuel units are of approved design and correctly installed. With the existing systems of the specially type which are equipped with an automatic humidifier and also an electrically operated draft regulator, refueling the warm air so it is conserved health, most economical to the use of oil or gas fuel. They are also the most efficient of the means of forced warm air circulating fuel because of the humidifier which maintains a proper moisture content in the air.

There are important factors to consider when using these expensive fuels. In the first place, the heating plant must be in good condition and it must be properly designed for the use of these fuels. Secondly, it must be definitely known to be installed by competent engineers. The most desirable operation of the heating plant requires the system transferred by thermostat in the house and there are no restrictions in the flow of air to the burner. Such equipment with the automatic heating systems. Therefore definite provisions are in order so as to take fuel oil or gas by requiring to maintain the proper air supply.

Homeowners are warned by the Institute not to expect oil or gas to completely eliminate coal dust in the home. Some dust is inevitable due to improper fuel pressure defects or poor

AUTO KILLINGS FORCE NEW JERSEY TO BUY RABBITS

"Pedestrians are divided into two classes the quick and the dead. And poor Bre'r Rabbit seems to be in the dead section. Every time he becomes a pedestrian on the high ways. He is faring much worse than the human pedestrian for one by one of his tribe is killed to every mile of highway in the United States, according to Lewis E. Pierson, president of the American Game Protective Association.

"Besides the annual toll taken of Bre'r Rabbit and other wild folk as charged to the raising of the speed limit on our roads, motorists are now receiving the deliberate destruction of the game refuges created by state laws. Most of the animals and birds are killed at night, blinded by headlights and many of the few that most of those wild folks could be saved by the exercise of thought-fulness and care on the part of the automobile driver. The majority of the animals and birds become frightened and mad in the middle of the road, in many cases the motorist could avoid striking them if he only saw them deliberately run them down with malice aforethought. Should protect the game no longer no per cent of this waste is entirely unnecessary.

AMERICA L'ADS CHEMICALS

The United States is the largest single factor in the World's chemical industry and one-half of the chemicals dollar output of America is claimed for our Nation. Another billion dollars worth of American chemicals annually enters into the manufacture of other products. Figures have the slash of the League of Nations Today the United States is by far the largest producer of chemicals, and the Department of Commerce reports that our imports total more than those of any other country.

It is well known that Germany was the "white-haired" leader in which many branches of the chemical industry, notable dyes. Before the war, but that nation lost a good deal of its supremacy in this direction. According to the Commerce Department, chemical chemicals are used largely by manufacturers for special uses in other products. It is these products that are advertised and to the raw materials which have been chemically treated by the chemical industry.

MINIATURE CITY

DEPICTING EIGHTEEN CAUSES OF ACCIDENTS

CHARLEVOIX CO. FAIR

R. F. Emery Will Give Short Talks on the Subject of Safety at Exhibit

"Safety City" the miniature city depicting 18 causes of accidents will open on exhibit at the Charlevoix County Fair. Mr. R. F. Emery of "Mayor of Safety City," as he is some times called, accompanies the exhibit and will give short talks on the subject of safety.

The model city, unique in its many details and recreation and electrical devices, is the contribution of the Michigan Mutual Liability Company on behalf of the citizens of Michigan, having as its mission in the prevention of industrial and every day accidents.

The exhibit is 20 feet long with its feet wide at each end, where modeled and scenic effects extend upward and outward in proper proportion. At one the entire foreground is the Detroit River on which are pioneer boats, ferries, motor boats and canoes. Along the waterfall extends Riverside Drive and a promenade. Predominant in the general view in Detroit's city line of which are seen the Book, Eaton, Harbins, and other tinted towers of skyscrapers, and in the foreground public library, department stores, the buildings of the Michigan Limited Liability Company and other prominent buildings, including the birthplace of Charles A. Lindbergh at 122 W. Forest Avenue. The Ford Airport displays its beacon light.

In the foregoing are typical city streets with modeled buildings of various types and all the details of a busy community faithfully carried out, even to complete mechanism by operated signal systems, in operation. Perfectly modeled to scale as

POTATO AND APPLE SHOW TO COME NEXT

HOW TO SELECT EXHIBITS

For the Eighth Annual Show to be Held at Gaylord, on October 29th to 31st

With potato digging just around the corner, the potato growers of the Top O'Michigan should plan to select a few potatoes for the Eighth Annual Potato and Apple Show at Gaylord on October 29th to 31st.

The best time to make the first selection is at digging time, according to R. F. Millemann, Secretary of the Show.

While many of the exhibitors at the Show most likely are regular in selecting show samples, Mr. Millemann believes there are many "beginners" in the game, who want to improve their selection and his advice is as follows:

(1.) While picking up the potatoes from the field at digging time, lay aside all those that are most nearly perfect as to size, shape and color and free from diseases and insects. Select the best twenty bushels in this manner and wrap with paper in bed to prevent bruising. (Hand digging is best).

(2.) When all the potatoes have been dug and put away, select the final show sample of one peck (8qt) or one bushel as the case may be.

(3.) Do not wash the potatoes but remove dirt with a soft brush or soft woolen cloth.

(4.) Keep potatoes wrapped in paper until they are placed on the show room table to prevent bruising and greening with exposure to light. Keep in a cool, dry, dark place.

(5.) Bring to the Show in person or send by your county agricultural agent. However, any samples sent to Gaylord in care of the Show by prepaid charges will be taken care of by the management according to the rules and regulations of the Show Association.

Mr. Millemann expecting to show for the first time would benefit by consulting with their county agricultural agent. All prospective exhibitors should get a premium book from their agricultural agent or write to R. F. Millemann, Secretary, Boyne City.

PURE BRED "RAM TRUCK" COMING

TWO DEMONSTRATIONS SCHEDULED SEPT. 17TH AND 18TH

The Michigan Purebred Sheep Breeders Association will again cooperate with the Michigan State College Extension Service by sending a truck load of purebred rams through the counties as well as other Northern Michigan Counties during the months of September and October.

Last year 104 rams and ewes were sold and delivered from the truck in twenty northern counties and according to plan, various the Ram Truck will again be presented at a series of flock improvement meetings where the rams will be used in demonstration purposes. Topics to be discussed will pertain to the sheep outlook, to fall management problems, and to breeding; besides there will be actual demonstrations on judging, selection of breeding, stock, lotting of ewes and on lamb grading. At the close of each meeting those individuals will be discussed and offered for sale.

The following meetings will be held in this county:

Wednesday afternoon, September 17, at 2:30, fast time, at Farm of Ed. Graham Charlevoix, located on Barnard road, south of Charlevoix.

Thursday forenoon, September 18 at 10:00, fast time at Farm of W. E. Barnett, East Jordan, located on road leading to Fair Grounds one-half mile from town.

The rams from the truck will be offered for sale at lower prices and at a reduction of from $5.00 to $10.00 under previous years.

All rams are personally inspected by the Michigan State College Specialists, and will be of excellent quality and type. Shropshire, Hampshire and Oxford breeds will be represented.

If you need a ram visit these demonstrations as no doubt you will find just the one to fill your needs. Know how to judge, sell, and rate for sheep for best results.

HOOVER TO HELP CELEBRATE A GREAT AMERICAN VICTORY

On October 7 the eyes of the nation will be centered on a rocky hillside in South Carolina where President Hoover will be the principal speaker at the celebration of a great American victory. Although this battle was fought on South Carolina soil it was Virginians, North Carolinians and Tennesseans, as well as South Carolinians, who won the victory which had an important result on the outcome of the struggle for liberty. In this issue of The Sentinel appears an illustrated feature article by Elmo Scott Watson which tells about the heroes who fought at Kings Mountain. AUTOMOBILE

LICENSE TIME AND REGULATIONS

AVAILABLE DECEMBER 1

Owners and Dealers are Urged to Observe the Following Precautions Very Closely

As the season for the issuance of half-year state automobile licenses is now at hand and the 1st of December, when the 1931 license plates will probably be available, is not far away, the manager of the local branch office of the state department would like to urge upon car owners and dealers the observance of the following regulations and precautions:

Do not sign an application, title transfer or other document in blank that is, before it has been properly filled out. Failure to observe this rule is likely to get one into considerable trouble, sometimes.

Be not sign any document, of any kind whatsoever, where your signature has to be sworn to before a notary, except in the presence of the notary. Notaries public are under no obligation for the right to sign all sorts of documents such as transferred titles, applications for new titles filled out by dealers, etc., presented to you for signature or to be handed in as the finished work of the notary.

Notaries public are under no obligation for the right to sign all sorts of documents such as transferred titles, applications for new titles filled out by dealers, etc., presented to you for signature or to be handed in as the finished work of the notary.

Notaries public are under no obligation to make charges for their services. Many have chosen to do so, however, and the last penny in every transaction.

OUR SUMMER VISITORS ARE DEPARTING

MANY REMAIN, LARGE NUMBER UNTIL OCT. AND NOV.

Sunday's visitors, vacationists and tourists are gradually returning to their homes. Many have closed their cottages for the season, others cottages are being closed from day to day and as they close summer visitors are departing. The automobile tags are seen on the streets and while the ordinance against double parking along Bridge street has not been strictly observed during recent weeks, when parking space was at a premium there is no necessity longer for a continuance of this violation of city law.

Taken all in all, the season has been good, equal to, possibly better than in past years. Cottages were well filled and large hotels were crowded to full capacity, with many more automobiles on the streets than formerly, while weather conditions from the view point of visitors, could not have been finer.

A goodly number of Summer citizens are at their cottages and will continue to occupy their Charlevoix homes for an indefinite period. Many of them will remain until late October and a few have decided to leave at a later date.

OF THE BUSY HONEY BEES LONG FLIGHT

In a locality in Wyoming where irrigated alfalfa is virtually the only source of honey, the agricultural department places some hives eight miles from the nearest motor supply. The bees made daily trips to the alfalfa, loaded with honey, and returned. Since the bees flew this distance regularly, the Department apiculturists assume they might fly even farther, if necessary.

Flying these sixteen-mile trips however, some bees fail to return home because sand storms overtake them or headwinds impede them. Under such flying conditions a single pound of honey would represent approximately 15,000 trips of sixteen miles each, or nearly 400,000 miles of flight by bees.

ANDREW ROSS

SUCCUMBS AFTER A PROLONGED ILLNESS

AGE OF SEVENTY SEVEN

Pioneer Prominent Charlevoix and Regional Citizen Passes Thursday Afternoon

Following an illness that has been continuous over a period of months Andrew Ross passed away at the local hospital, where he had been taken for treatment several days earlier, Thursday afternoon, September fourth at the age of seventy-seven years.

Mr. Ross was born in Canada, of Scotch parentage, August 15, 1853, and about fifteen years later came to Michigan where he remained, the major part of the time in this nearby territory as I largely in Charlevoix, where for many years he was engaged in lumbering operations and manufacturing lumber. He underwent numerous changes, how to handle it economically from virgin forest to mill yard, and after it delivery to the mill as an expert in turning the raw material into manufactured products, without waste to the loss advantage and thus too, with the minimum of helpers in mill and yard. Under such conditions manufacturings lumber constituted his labor during many years of his active life, and in this it can be said that he attained a full measure of success. His ability to successfully conduct lumbering operations and mill manufacturing the products into building materials is evidence by the fact that for about forty years he was manager for the Charlevoix Lumber Company.

The record of his life and work in Charlevoix for the past sixty years is an open book to our citizens and makes for an excellent record of human honesty, honorable industry and energetic effort such as leads to success and makes for good character and substantial citizenship.

Mr. Ross had to his credit a wide field of experience both in official and business life. In the former he was faithful in the performance of official duty and in this rightly did he regard the interest of the public. In the latter he was accurate, honest to the last penny in every transaction.

SHOW WILD LIFE

AT THE CHARLEVOIX COUNTY FAIR

CONSERVATION EXHIBIT

Of Michigan Wild Life, Fair Grounds East Jordan September 23-26

Minks, muskrats of the swamps and waters of Michigan are fond of a tropical fruit—bananas—except certain individuals, according to reports, usually considered the finest. Hard to consider anything but real meat as a delicacy by the carnivorous animals but it is a fact that they do have a taste for bananas.

A farewell reception was held in honor of Rev. and Mrs. Ingraham, Episcopal Church last Thursday evening by Dr. and Mrs. H. G. Mattern, who have been friends and by his daily life commended to the highest degree the true spirit of Christian leadership.

Dr. Mattern is a valuable citizen and his loss is a distinct loss to this community. Into his removal to Manistee is a cause of sincere regret among Charlevoix citizens

McKinley park, Alaska, at altered years of age, with the nearest neighbor forty miles away, was the recent experience of Bill Mason of Lapeer, Mich., now a Jamestown student at the Michigan state college at East Lansing. He returned in August, 1925, after thirteen months in Alaska.

The job of being a ranger included driving dog teams through snowy, wind-swept winter camps lands where his only hope of reaching the night's shelter lay in good navigation by the sun—lands that scarcely one white man in a thousand ever sees. Bill had to foster a trail long bought on a year old, sleep in sleeping bags where inches of snow covered the ground, and shoot enough food for his dogs and himself to subsist on while making winter patrol trips.

Bill's cabin was a log one, and was thoroughly warm and comfortable although the temperature outside went down to 60 degrees below zero. Fuel was plentiful, and there was no danger of running short of water which ran in streams from springs.

"Ranger Bill" Mason.

Bill's principal duties were to patrol the park, which he did on snowshoes and with dog teams, and to protect the game. He was also required to keep a record of the weather, of the movements of game animals, and of the number of visitors to the park. Bill's predecessor had kept a record of 100 visitors during the year, but Bill's record showed only 12. Most of these were tourists who had come in by airplane, and who remained only a few hours.

Bill's dog team consisted of seven huskies, which he had to feed and care for. He had to cut wood for the cabin stove, and to keep the cabin clean. He had to keep his clothing in order, and to do his own cooking. He had to keep his rifle in order, and to keep himself in practice in shooting it. He had to keep his snowshoes in order, and to keep himself in practice in using them. He had to keep his sleeping bag in order, and to keep himself in practice in using it. He had to keep his dog whip in order, and to keep himself in practice in using it. He had to keep his dog collars in order, and to keep himself in practice in using them. He had to keep his dog leashes in order, and to keep himself in practice in using them. He had to keep his dog muzzles in order, and to keep himself in practice in using them. He had to keep his dog boots in order, and to keep himself in practice in using them. He had to keep his dog blankets in order, and to keep himself in practice in using them. He had to keep his dog coats in order, and to keep himself in practice in using them. He had to keep his dog sweaters in order, and to keep himself in practice in using them. WHAT BRINGS TAX RELIEF?

According to an article in the Manufacturer's News, taxes collected by state and local governments totaled $1,526,000,000 in 1913; $4,242,000,000 in 1927; $5,148,000,000 in 1928 and they are still on the increase. In 25 years our public income has increased 325 per cent, as compared with a 700 per cent rise in taxes.

Since the war the Federal government has kept fairly economically to an economy program which has permitted an appreciable decrease in national taxes. In contrast to this, state and local governments have gone on extravagant orgies of spending. Unnecessary and extravagant expenditures by municipal governments are the most pressing tax menace and they have made and demand from the American pocketbook.

There is but one effective, time tested method to remove the tax burden. Unless it is applied, taxes will continue to increase. That method is economy in government.

GIVING THE CRIMINAL A GREAT ADVANTAGE

"The professional criminal will always get his gun, by theft, through a 'source' or from a gun runner, regardless of any legislation, says Captain Charles H. Gilman, in overlooking or a pampered anti-revolver law.

To all, it appears to the writer, that the possible public benefit from further accretion of those who can not be trusted with a gun and the corresponding increase in the work of the police in the matter of law enforcement is an extremely great set back to the cause of law and order. BATTLE OF KINGS MOUNTAIN
OCTOBER 7, 1780
Sketch made in April 1928
by Lt Col H L Landon, F.A.
Historical section Army War College.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

OCTOBER 7 the attention of the United States will be centered on a rocky hillside in the extreme northern part of South Carolina where will be celebrated the semi-centennial of a brilliant American victory in the War of Independence. The principal speaker at the commemoration exercises will be President Herbert Hoover, whose words of tribute will be heard by thousands of Americans, since his address is to be broadcast over a nationwide hookup. The event which will thus be recalled is the battle of Kings Mountain on October 7, 1780 when a force of some 900 American frontiersmen surrounded an army of more than 1,000 British Provincial troops and Tory militia, commanded by Maj. Patrick Ferguson, a British regular. Allied and outnumbered Ferguson took the mountain position while suffering a loss of only 28 killed and 62 wounded.

The battle of Kings Mountain was one of the most dramatic episodes in the struggle for liberty, both as to the armies in it and the results of which it was fought. Compared to other battles, so far as the number of men engaged is concerned, it was only a small affair, but its results were so enormous as to make it one of the outstanding events of the whole seven years' conflict. The victory came at a dark hour in the struggle for liberty. In the north Benedict Arnold had turned traitor. Battle through New York by the British and Tories was seriously threatened by the rout of Washington's army. Some of his Continentals were in mutinous mood. Congress seemed to come from congressional neglect, were lamenting numerous. In the south the British had virtually completed the subjugation of South Carolina and Georgia. Charleston had surrendered. Clinton and Tarleton had cut to pieces the forces of the rebel partisans, Sumter. With only scattered bands of partisan forces in the field, Cornwallis proceeded with the invasion of North Carolina.

As a part of his plan Maj. Patrick Ferguson had been sent toward the back country of the Carolinas to create any partisan opposition which might develop, but primarily to raise, train and recruit them to his forces. Ferguson was very successful in his efforts. His ranks soon had recruited of 125 picket officers and men, taken from several regular battalions raised in New York and New Jersey and formed into a temporary provisional corps. With a short time he had been joined by nearly 1,000 Tory militia to whom he gave a certain amount of training. The partisan leaders were making strong efforts to oppose the advance. But Charles Mcdowell of Burke county, Joseph Graham, Isaac Shelby on the Broad river [illegible] over the South Carolina line when he heard of Ferguson's advance. He sent a hasty call for help across the mountains to John Sevier and Isaac Shelby, leaders of the pioneers who had settled on the Nolichucky and Watauga, on the Holston and the French Broad in what is now eastern Tennessee.

Sevier had his hands full fighting the Cherokees, but he sent 200 men to Mcdowell's aid and Shelby rounded over with a smaller force from Sullivan county. There was a short period of question settling in which Shelby was chosen commander at Musgrove, Mills. Then came the news of Cornwallis' crushing defeat of Gates at Camden. Shelby and Mcdowell were forced to flee to the mountains, closely pursued by Ferguson, to avoid being crushed between that officer and Cornwallis. Ferguson next advanced to Gilbert Town and there made the big mistake of his campaign. He parolled a lieutenant of Shelby's and sent him home with a letter in which he informed the "Back Water Men," as he called them, that if they did not "desist from their opposition to British arms he would march his army across the mountains, hang the leaders and lay the country waste with fire and sword."

The response to this threat was instantaneous. It not what Ferguson had expected. These hardy frontiersmen were not the kind to be frightened easily. The enmity of the Revolution were his little known in many of them. They had been little in common with the inhabitants of the lowlands east of the mountains. Down upon their struggles, there was no special reason why they should take an active part in a quarrel between the king and his rebellious colonies on the Atlantic coast. But when authority, in the form of militia commanded by a British officer, threatened their independence it aroused in them a fierce resentment.

When Shelby received Ferguson's letter he made preparations to defeat for a conference. The two leaders realized that the issue must be decided before he could secure enough reinforcements to enable him to thrust his enemy. Messengers were sent to Col William Campbell on the Clinch river in Virginia for aid. The call to arms was carried to every settlement west of the mountains. Sycamore Shoals on the Watauga was set as the rendezvous and there on September 26 gathered more than 1,000 frontiersmen, armed with the long rifle of dreams accuracy. Nearly all of them were mounted and as they assembled they made ready to ride against the invader their pastor, Rev. Samuel Doak, went from one group to the other with the benediction, "With the Sword of the Lord and of Gideon!"

Soon after they crossed the summit of the mountains they discovered that the Tories in their midst had slipped away to carry a warning to Ferguson. There was none near enough before he could do his enemies as rapidly to Quaker Meadows a short way, they were joined by Colonel Cleveland with the men from Wilkes county, North Carolina, and by Major Winston with the men from Surry and Rowan counties.

Meanwhile the two deserters had reached Ferguson and told him the story of the force that was coming against him. He realized what a hornet's nest he had stirred up by his letter from Gilbert Town. So he left that place and started to Charlotte post words and ease toward Charlotte Town, where Cornwallis was encamped on September 27. By October 6 he had reached Kings Mountain and, finding it admirably suited for giving battle to the Americans should they take the initiative, he made his camp on its summit. It was about 30 miles from Charlotte Town, though, if believed, to Cornwallis to secure aid if he should need it.

On this same date, October 6, the mountain men reached the spot where they were joined by Col. James Williams of South Carolina with 400 men who had been in pursuit of Ferguson. This detachment was made up of groups of Pointer's men from South Carolina under Colonels Hill and Lacey, of men from Georgia under Colonel Clarke, Hambright and Chronicle. Upon being informed of Ferguson's position the American leaders decided that a quick dash was necessary if they were to catch Ferguson before he joined Cornwallis. Accordingly they selected 900 of the best horsemen and at eight o'clock on a night they started on their march. Each man carried his own provisions, but they planned standby on and about noon the next day. They were ordered and the army came only to silence upon their approach.

Shelby in his account of the story dismissed the matter on Kings Mountain. It was a table land about 600 yards long, 60 to 120 feet wide, rising some 60 feet above its immediate surroundings. It formed fortress, its sides covered with trees and its top protected by huge rocks. The mountain was dismounted at the foot of the mountain, tied their horses in the rears, and prepared for the attack. The plan agreed upon was to surround the hill and trap the defenders with a ring of fire as the ever-tightening circle of riflemen ascended the slopes.

About three o'clock the battle began. As Ferguson's outposts discovered the Americans, they began to fall back, blowing his whistle to rally his men to arms. His riflemen opened fire, but with little effect upon the mountain men who were gliding from tree to tree, button fashion, and firing whenever they caught the slightest glimpse of the enemy. Ferguson's men rolling down hill were overwhelming their targets constantly while the mountain men, accustomed to shooting squirrels out of the tallest trees were handling their long rifles with deadly effectiveness.

Ferguson sent brief but fierce charges, but the frontiersmen simply gave way until the charge had spent its force, then reopened, taking their toll as the British entered. Ferguson was everywhere, blowing his whistle to encourage his men and his voice could be plainly heard above the sharp crack of the rifles and the [illegible] war-whoops of the mountain men. Captain De Peyster, Ferguson's second in command, had fought nearly now as there at Musgrove Mills and at the head of the Americans' cause he is said to have remarked to Ferguson, "Those things are mountaineers. Some are the d—d yelling boys!"

There were others in his command who knew that the fight would soon be lost. Two white handkerchiefs affixed to bayonets were raised aloft but Ferguson angrily slashed them down with his sword. Two horses were also under the British leader, but he mounted another and continued his efforts to rally his men. Finally as some of the mountain men reached the summit and the [illegible] warriors attacked swinging their tomahawks and knives, the white handkerchiefs were again raised. De Peyster begged Ferguson to surrender. "Surrender to those d—d [illegible]!" replied that officer. "Never!" But as he spoke their cries of [illegible] ceased to be now like the day was lost.

In an effort to snatch victory from defeat, he with several of his officers turned their horses' heads and, [illegible] their way through the [illegible] Tennessee who were [illegible] and brazenly killed. De Peyster then advanced with a white flag and surrendered his sword to Campbell. Despite the fact that white flags were waving at different places along the line the fighting did not cease immediately. Some of the frontiersmen did not know the significance of this emblem and others interested in the thought of what they had suffered from the Tories in Ferguson's command, were not to be stopped and had been carrying on a [illegible] [illegible] and to shoot down every Tory they could. Finally Sevier was able to put a stop to what was turning into a massacre and with, together with Campbell, a number of the prisoners later, succeeded in the [illegible] of the spirits of vengeance in New York in 1777 which culminated in the surrender of Burgoyne.

Fortunately, however, for a better understanding of the significance of Kings Mountain as to the details of the battle, which have become obscured by historians who in fancied accuracy, there has appeared in recent months a history of the fight written from the military point of view, which corrects many of these errors and places the battle in its proper perspective. It is the work of Lieut. Col. H. L. Landon of the United States Army ret. college who, as the result of congressional action looking forward to making into battleground a national military park, was detailed to prepare a historical statement concerning the battle for the War Department.

Colonel Landon not only made an intensive study of all the printed sources of information and of all the available maps of the region, but he also went to South Carolina and went over, [illegible] the making. He had made study of the ground. The result, published by the government printing office at Washington as House Document No. 326, Seventieth Congress, First Session, is undoubtedly the most thoroughly reliable account of the battle which has ever been made.

The Indians of the army historian apparently do not justify the "Terrible Picture of the Revolution" characteristics of the battle of Kings Mountain. But he does say that "the battle of Kings Mountain was the outstanding campaign of the Americans in 1780. Following it, Cornwallis was compelled to abandon North Carolina, and for a time to assume the defensive. It put an end to the possibility of an eventual peace with England under such terms as might have resulted in the reception of the southern provinces under British rule. It is an accomplishment of American aspirations for self-government and a display of [illegible] and bravery well worthy of the careful study of American youth."

A FEW FISH DISHES

There are so many delightful fishes which may be prepared from canned fish that no matter how far one is from the sea, these dishes may be quickly prepared:

Lobster Canapes.—Cut bread into one-fourth inch slices. Toast slightly with cooky cutter into circles or crescents. Cream two tablespoonfuls of butter, add one carpful of finely minced lobster meat, a teaspoonful of minced, six olives chopped fine a few drops of worcestershire sauce, a dash of cayenne. Cook the bread in a frying butter until golden, spread with the lobster mixture, garnish with lettuce and serve.

Lobster a la Newburg.—Pick the lobster from the can in small pieces and heat in a double boiler in two tablespoonfuls of butter. Sprinkle with paprika and cayenne to taste. Heat the yolks of two eggs, add one teaspoonful of cream and then it over the lobster, stirring until thick and smooth. Serve at once on hot waffers, or timbale of toast.

Tuna Fish a la Nassau.—Take a large can of tuna fish, drain, break with a fork. Chop together two tablespoonfuls each of butter and flour, season with salt and pepper and add a pint of scalded tomato juice. Cook until it forms a smooth sauce, add the fish and heat but not boil. Serve hot or cold with the sauce.

Tuna Fish Bake.—Mix one can of tuna fish with two cups finely cut celery, one cup finely grated cheese, one cup soft bread crumbs, [illegible] with milk and seasoning to taste. Add salt, pepper and celery salt to taste, with one well beaten egg. Form the mixture into small balls, dip into flour, [illegible] with beaten egg and toss into crumbs crumbs then again into egg. Fry in deep cooking fat until a golden brown. Drain and serve hot, garnished with parsley and lemon. Test the fat for frying by dropping a cube of bread into it, if it browns in forty seconds it is ready for frying.

Cod Meat Salad.—Cut a can of cod meat into a sauce pan with two tablespoonfuls of butter. Cook together one tablespoonful of flour, one-half cupful of cream and salt and pepper to taste. Simmer until the flour is well cooked, add the hulled fish and crumbled cod. Spread on buttered toast points. Heat over the broiler and garnish with a few sliced of stuffed olives or a white olives.

STUFFED DATES

Do we ever tire of the delectable dates? They are so good to serve [illegible] are a few fillings for stuffed dates:

Orange Peanut.—To one-third of a cupful of peanut butter add about five tablespoonfuls of orange juice and one-half teaspoonful of grated orange rind. Fill the dates and roll them in chopped salted peanuts.

Brazil Nut Fondant.—To one and one-half cupfuls of confectioner's sugar add one-eighth teaspoonful of vanilla, two tablespoonfuls of thin cream and one-third of a cupful of chopped brazil nut meats. Place only a small quantity of [illegible] in each date as then the filling may be completely covered and nuts mixed, Brazil nuts are easily shelled if nuts are steamed ten minutes before cracking.

Apricot Creamy.—Add one cupful of cream whipped, one-half cupful of sugar to soften, then run through a food chopper with one-half cupful of nut meats and two-thirds of a cupful of apricots. Add the tablespoonfuls of orange juice and one teaspoonful of orange rind. Mix until well blended. Stuff dates and roll in sugar.

Marshmallow Creamy.—Cut one-fourth pound of marshmallows into quarters with wet scissors. Stuff each date with a piece of marshmallow, replacing the cut side up. Dip the stuffed surface of the marshmallow into the shredded coconut.

Jumbo dates are prepared by pressing the edges of two dates together and stuffing as one.

Persian Event.—Take one package of dates, one package of coconut, one-fourth pound each of figs and dried apricots, put through a food chopper. Add a tablespoonful of orange juice and a teaspoonful of the grated rind. Mix well and divide into parts. Form fruit mixture into the dates, placing small pecan lightly oiled or buttered, press them together and place a nut meat on each square. Chill, cut into [illegible] with a sharp knife that has been dipped into water.

For toasted candies make the mixture into balls and roll in coconut which has been browned in the oven. Roll some of the mixture into a long rope, cut into lengths, roll in chopped nuts and fruit bags are made. For scarms make small balls and insert an almond or large peanut into each. Dip the scarm cap into chocolate.

HARTLEY DeGERALD RETURNS HOME

Hartley DeGerald, the Theven yard man son of John DeGerald, vice president of the Peoples National Bank & Trust Co., 47th and Ashland Avenue, returned home last week after a the long trip to the West Indies where he saw all that there was to see as far south as the northern shoulder of South America, to the east, the united British Guiana in the southern continent.

It is not the first time that Hartley has made long trips from home and has traveled as far as he has to the South Seas.

Hartley breaks a prime favorite aboard ship during the voyage quarters, and also being chaperoned by one of the many prominent travelers who took great interest in the smiling lad traveler. Hartley De-Gerald did not bring home a monkey to his younger brother as he was commissioned to do for various relatives and friends, but his younger brother was completely reconciled after hearing a recital of Hartley's trip to the Islands and waives formerly to bell pirates and other adventurers like John McCutcheon.

As usual Hartley and his more youthful brother are off this week end to Beaver Island, away up in Lake Michigan off the shores of Charlevoix. John DeGerald and Mrs. DeGerald don't worry for the boys are cautious to a remarkable degree and have been raised to be self dependent.

The lad is well known at Beaver Island having visited there regularly for several years, usually going over in early spring time and remaining until late in the season.

Like a war general in conference before the staging of a battle, William A. Wellman, director Paramount's new Charles (Buddy) Rogers picture, "Young Eagles," called the star, Paul Lukas and the other pilots in the picture to him before the filming of each action and plotted with them each maneuver in the air.

The entire scene was gone over in these conferences, move by move, fly gesture and by diagram every situation was made clear, until each flyer knew exactly how to advance and when to retreat.

One of the thrilling scenes of this great drama of the World war, which will show at the Palace Theatre, starting Saturday for 2 days, is the "dog-fight" between the planes of Rogers and Lukas, ending with the crash of Rogers' ship. All the maneuvers used in aerial combat in the war are revived, including the "Immelman roll."

Jones was never an early bird at the office. One morning he been explained, "Late again Have you every done anything on time?"

"Yes, sir," was the meek but promptly reply. "I purchased a car."

"Dad," said son, who was reading the automobile news, "do you think they will ever find a substitute for gasoline?"

"They have one now son, and I wish you'd give it a trial."

"Huh?" queried son incredulously. "I've never heard of it. What is it, anyway?"

"Shoe leather," explained dad.

FISHERMEN IN TROUBLE

Sheriff Vaughan and two members of the State police are trying to discover who is responsible for the fish and damage to fishing nets, nets and camp equipment recently at Hog Island and nearby fishing grounds. Some substantial evidence has been found and two men placed under arrest charges with malicious destruction of property. The criminal charge makes for a case to be heard in Circuit court and probably will come before Judge Parks O. Gilbert at the October term. Fishermen at Cross Village and Beaver Island are interested in the case. The former on account of loss and damage sustained. The latter as defendants in the action brought.

Luck means the hardships and privations that you have not hesitated to endure; the long nights you have devoted to work. Luck means the appointments you have been fallen to keep; the trains you have never failed to catch.

IMPROVEMENT FOR THE HARBOR

MEETING HELD IN COUNCIL CHAMBER

At a public hearing held in the City of Charlevoix at the council room, Tuesday afternoon, September 16, 1930, at two o'clock, by the United States Engineer Department for the purpose of considering recommendations as to further repairs to and improvements to Charlevoix harbor and contiguous waterways, the following persons were present.

L. W. Goddard, engineer-in-charge U. S. Engineer Department, Grand Rapids, Michigan, A. F. Everell, Assistant Engineer, U. S. Engineer Department, Grand Rapids, Michigan, Major Trupp, District Engineer, U.S. Engineer Department, Grand Rapids, Michigan, who conducted the hearing.

George W. Weaver, Kenneth Delue, H. I. Deue, R. F. Sloan, H. R. Fowler, A. J. Lisher, Charles B. Gallagher, James J. Gaskins, Clarence Wood, William Wallace, Arthur Bergeon, E. C. Sherrett, Simon M. Boss, H. B. Jarmin, H. W. Partridge, W. C. Bellinger, Fred E. Carrier, F. J. Pressnell, Oakley J. Lamoreaux, H. A. Craig, Robert B. Armstrong, Frank Bottoni, E. S. Swanton, J. H. Gallagher, Frank Gallagher, C. Gilbert, C. S. Webster, Robert Bringe, Ray S. Hamilton, O. F. Willier representing the business and professional interests of the community. Stenographer notes were taken by Frederick V. Taylor. Meeting was called to order by Major Trupp at 2:05 p. m. (Central Standard Time.

Mr. Tripp made a general statement as to the object of the meeting and government regulations as to why and how it should be conducted. That was followed by a resolution signed by Arthur Bergeon, Mayor of City of Charlevoix and R. S. Swanton, President of the Argo Milling Company, a copy of which will appear later, in reference to improvement in the rear future of the reverement on the north side of the harbor in the community bridge to a point some distance west of the end of present revetment.

It was followed by a statement by the same persons as to the necessity of the improvement that the contemplated improvement was not only desirable but essential and that construction of the project would be a superior benefit to navigation and to no small extent protect property situated along the river bank, terrace, etc. Practically all present either volunteered or were called upon to express their views and in many instances Major Tripp sought information, statistical, from those best informed on local conditions, shipments, transportation facilities, size and number of steamships plying their ports, etc.

MOVIE VILLIANS DISAPPEARING SAYS FILM DIRECTOR

The typical motion picture villian has no place in modern, realistic pictures, and his type will disappear completely in the near future, according to William Beaudine, noted director.

As an example of the villianless picture, Beaudine points to "Road Show To Paradise," a First National and Pathe production special he directed, which is coming to the Fauss theatre Thursday and Friday.

"There are very few genuine villians in real life," Beaudine declares. "Most of us are villians part of the time, and sometimes we are villians all the time, but seldom are we entirely villianous as well. It depends somewhat on the state of the liver and whether or not we've had enough sleep. Hangovers make villians, too, in the modern sense of the word.

"If ever the villain will continue to reign in a particular kind of film, and in swashbuckling period films, but in the modern sort he will be treated humanly and realistically. In 'Road to Paradise,' for instance, I favor we might pick Hutton as the villian, although the story of course is a perfectly human and universally appealing picture for which I already have started by from-legged traffic cops.

There are many means and now days to destroy insects, but the progress we are making in the unwelcome guest is to ride him our home in the automobile and then put him in the folding bed.

BARNARD CALF CLUB ACHIEVEMENT DAY

NINETEEN CLUB ANIMALS WILL BE SHOWN AND JUDGED

The Barnard Junior Dairymen extend a cordial invitation to their parents, co-workers, and friends to attend their first Achievement Day and Exhibit at Barnard, on Saturday, September 20.

Cash and one Jesse splendid calves that have been so efficiently reared for by these young enthusiastic dairymen, who are participating in the Boys' and Girls' Club program.

A most interesting and inspiring program has been arranged for your enjoyment and pleasure. At 11:00 last time there will be a ball game between the Club boys and their parents. Beware, parents! At 12:30 everyone eats. Bring your well-filled lunch baskets and enjoy a real picnic.

The afternoon program will start at 1:30 promptly, with a demonstration on "Fitting and Showing the Calf," by two club members, Carl Smith and Robert Cummings. These two boys demonstrated at the Gaylord Club Camp and the Goosey Picnic. Don't miss this feature. Then James Block and Warren Shannon will describe their trips to the Gaylord Club Camp and the State Fair at Detroit respectively. These two boys can hardly wait to tell you their wonderful experiences. Next two parents of club members will be on the program with short talks, "What Club Work means." Their identity is secret, but they are some orators. The main address of the Achievement Day will be given by L. V. Benjamin, District Club Leader of Gaylord. His subject will be "The Value of 4-H Club Work." We are particularly pleased to have Mr. Benjamin with us, as he has worked with a high degree of success with boys and girls, and has had a large variety of pleasant contacts and experiences in Club Work.

The judging of the calves comprises the big day. Ribbons will be awarded the winners by the various breed associations. Premium money will also be given, through the generosity of Charlevoix business men. The exhibit will be judged by L. V. Benjamin. Also, don't forget the Barnard Band will play several selections. This band of young musicians are making a name for themselves throughout the county.

Space does not permit more details, but come, bring your family and friends, and see Club Work on Parade, Saturday, September 20, at Barnard.

LOCAL GRIDDERS PLAY ONAWAY

In Season's Opener on Saturday—Close Game is Expected

Coach Ray Kipker's football team will make its first public appearance of the season this coming Saturday when it tackles the Onaway Eleven. The game is to be played on the local field and the boys would appreciate the moral support that it would mean if when a large crowd of spectators is on hand for the event.

Personally, we look for a close game, although the Red and White team ought to come out ahead. You might remember the severe drubbings that have been given Onaway in the past few years, and wonder why we do not predict another similar result in this encounter. The most important reason why Onaway will put up a good scrap will be that their boys are somewhat tired of being a "warm-up" opponent for Charlevoix, and they will naturally be ready to "show us." However, Charlevoix will probably uncork a tricky play or two that will put the game on ice.

Charlevoix has a good chance to win the Class C championship this year, last year the locals lost only one game out of six, and Boyne City, the conqueror, has lost a number of their best players by graduation and also by failures to keep scholastic work up to the required standard. Among the teams that Charlevoix will have to beat this year to win the coveted trophy are Harbor Springs, East Jordan, Boyne City, Gaylord, Mesopleus and Onaway. Let's watch them do it!

"Frugality Makes a Poor Man Rich"

Seneca, the philosopher of olden times, had the right idea—whether or not he practiced it is another question.

Frugality, economy, saving, will indeed raise the poor man to reasonable comfort.

Even though you may not be poor (probably are not), still you will go much farther if you save presistently, for it isn't the amount you save that counts so much as the persistence with which you save.

LIKE A SCOTLAND YARD TALE

Everyone has heard of Scotland Yard, the famous detective headquarters of Great Britian. The true stories which comes from that source are equal to anything which ever developed in the brain of a fiction writer. In the story, "The Mazroon Mystery," we have a tale with the true Scotland Yard flavor, although it is not claimed that it was transcribed from the records of that institution; but it is well known that J. S. Fletcher, the author, gets on operation for most of his thrilling detective stories from police annals and incidents of real life. It is easy to believe that this one was so derived. In our next issue "The Mazroon Mystery," starting in The Sentinel with the issue of October 2.

MISS ADELINE S. HOLLEY PASSES

LOCAL BUSINESS WOMAN AND LONG TIME RESIDENT

Charlevoix citizens generally were stunned Sunday morning, when news reached here that Miss Adeline S. Holley had passed away at the home of W. Bingham, Ann Arbor, where she entered for treatment less than one week previous, the death notice coming shortly after her friends received information that her previous condition was greatly improved and her complete recovery, unless something unforseen set in would be rapid. The unforseen happened and a few hours later came the notice of her death, a shock to relatives and Charlevoix friends. Miss Holley was born at Detroit, November 2, 1870, where she lived until she came to Charlevoix seven years later, in fact since which time she has been a permanent resident of this city, and one of its highest type law abiding citizens, respected and loved by every one.

She was a graduate of Charlevoix High School, Class of 1901, and a thorough student and hard worker in student efforts, a girl of pleasing personality, and as such won and retained friends from her early days throughout her stay of life and in the point where she was an honored, welcome guest in every local home. Modesty and refinement were characteristic virtues and these in a high degree in the life of the deceased. Hence her passing is a distinct loss to Charlevoix and a source of deep grief to relatives and friends.

For twelve years she was accountant in the local office of the Michigan Bell Telephone Company—for two seasons she was at the desk in the Bush Hotel and for some time Secretary for the Charlevoix Association of Commerce, filling each position with a high degree of efficiency, exactitude and care attainment.

Eight years ago she engaged in business on her own account, under the firm name of "Holley Gift Shop." Starting in a small way, From the first the business has gradually grown and expanded and under her supervision produced satisfactory financial results.

Funeral services was from the home of her mother, Mrs. Louise Kinter, on Dixon avenue, Wednesday afternoon, Dr. R. E. Masters officiating. Besides her mother above mentioned, she is survived by three sisters, Captain William C., Captain Alfred C. and Harry H. Taylor, all of Charlevoix.

THE KITCHEN CABINET

By Ida Bailey Allen
Famous Homemaking Authority

The world is not the same world now-days.

And the standards follow the lads.

And yesterday's sweet and tender-hearts today.

Can never be seen over again.

MEALS FOR A DAY.

For a hot-dish meal it may take a scotch kettle or a dutch oven, or the food may be cooked in one utensil. A tough piece of meat which has much flavor when the more tender and expensive cuts will not, is delicious and easily made tender to the consistency of a fork and mealy when proper heat is in the hot stove and broiler will go all some corn pudding and add a tablespoonful of sugar, cover tightly and cook until tender. Serve with butter and seasonings.

Grape Juice Cream—Take a pint of grape juice, a quarter cup of sugar, one lemon, half one pint of cream, one tablespoonful of cornstarch and one cup flour. This makes a most beautiful pink ice and is good as well. Heat grape juice to boiling point and add sugar and lemon juice. Mix cornstarch and flour to a smooth paste with cold water and add to hot mixture. Cook 20 minutes in double boiler and add cream. Freeze.

Tomato Preserves—Weigh ripe tomatoes and allow three pounds of a pound of sugar to a pound of tomatoes and one lemon to each pound. Scald, peel, cut in halves and remove the seeds, but with the whole to cooker and three pounds. Add the tomatoes and cook until clear. Add the sugar and cook until thick. Slice the lemon very thin, remove the seeds and add to the tomatoes. Cook slowly about two hours, stirring frequently to prevent burning. Pour into glasses and seal.

Hydrated Ice Cream—This is a tempting delicacy which is never eaten as long as one wishes, owing to the quart of the strawberry season has been drained pending, and with a pint of water when mixed, stirred and set into custards of sugar, or more, before, and a tablespoonful of vanilla in the usual milk and, then stirred, add a tablespoonful of lemon, or orange juice and freeze. Serve with cake or cookies.

Nippy Cheese Sandwich—Add the thoroughness of any cooking operation to two cupfuls of cooked tomato, strained and thickened with two tablespoons each of butter and flour, when mixture is the consistency of cream add two cupfuls of grated cheese, a teaspoonful of salt, a teaspoonful of pepper, one-fourth teaspoonful of mustard and one-fourth teaspoonful of cayenne pepper. Remove from the fire and add one tablespoonful of vinegar. Pour over toast. This will serve eight people.

Egg-Salad Sandwich—Add one-half teaspoonful of salt, one-eighth teaspoonful of pepper and one-half cup of vinegar to one tablespoonful of butter, one-half cup of sugar and one tablespoonful of flour in double boiler. This makes a most delicious dressing for egg sandwiches or chopped peanuts. Mix well and cook.

Sirup for Drinks—Take one gallon of boiling water and twelve pounds of sugar and boil for one hour, stirring occasionally. Keep in sterilized bottles. Add to any fruit juice as it comes from the strainer, and when cold add a little orangeade or lemon juice and enough fresh fruit juice to make a quart of sirup to a glass of crushed ice for an individual serving.

Lundin Treasure Finder is a recent visitor to the ruins made by Thomas Gann, the archaeologist, in searching on expeditions in search of the Peten district of Guatemala.

The pyramids temple, behind the river, in the jungles of Lundin and Guatemala, has stood now little more than a heap of stones, but it is known to archaeologists as Mayan Indians. Some of the stones are carved with strange symbols.

Gann has found that the Lundin Treasure Finder is a relic of events in the prime years in Mexico.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

By WALTER TRUMBULL

You never can tell in New York, who a casual acquaintance may turn out to be. Henry Clapp Smith tells me that a quiet appearing man came into a book store and ordered about $30 worth of books. He gave the name and asked that they be shipped to him with the bill. As he talked as if he might purchase more books, the firm thought it as well to get a rating on him. The word that came back from the credit house was:

"This man is good for $1,000,000."

Will Rogers is reported to have signed a movie contract at $1,000,000 a week. If that report is correct he should be able to keep on and on, and on, and on,

ARMAMENT AND WAR

The International League for Peace and Freedom has issued from its Washington headquarters an appeal for immediate world disarmament. In so doing they declare that governments which maintain military and navy establishments are thus side by side with the question of trade building programs for destruction. All of the agencies know that peaceful ways, we have of relieving disarmament in China and Russia, for obvious reasons, is no more possible than that the moon will don a kimono. They also know that complete disarmament would leave all countries the prey of established forces incited from the headquarters of world insurrection in Moscow. The most prominent European agent is Dr. Albert Einstein, the mortal star who is advocating the repudiation of debts to the United States by European nations. The most destructive of all wars are civil wars, which the disarming of governments would promote, not prevent. Without armaments no country could long defend its independence. Dr. Coy has clearly proved, there is an economic purpose. That purpose is the economic integration of human effort and energy. That level will necessarily spring to a lower level than that which has been rising while that of Europe has remained stationary, and sacrifice the welfare of the American people in behalf of alleged world welfare. The present depression in the United States is due to a failure of the American government under guidance of capitalistic interests to look out for American citizens and conform well being as against the pressures of European and international political and financial interests.

GOOD NEWS

The Federal Government estimates that $1,750,000,000 will be spent on the nation's good roads this year—$250,000,000 more than in 1929.

This is good news. As the San Francisco Chronicle remarks, road building is one field in which production cannot run ahead of consumption. Every year witnesses increased motorization of all industrial and social activities. Millionaires of new cars come onto the highways, resulting in a congestion that can be relieved only by building more roads.

It is to be hoped that a large part of the $1,750,000,000 will be spent on the construction of secondary, or farm-to-market roads. During recent years splendid highways have United States. But rural districts have been built between the cities of the for the most part, must still depend on the type of road that was in existence back in the horse-and-wagon age. There are 6,250,000 American farmers and a well known agricultural authority estimates that 5,000,000 of them are cut off from their city markets.

The people of the United States are beginning to understand just what interstate trade means. They must also begin to understand that behind the alluring phrases in which free trade is couched, what is really in mind is a lusty grab by a division of wealth between the United States and the rest of the world, in which we will be the heavy losers.

What the internationalists lose sight of is that our social and political system may not survive the tribution America has made to human welfare by the development and practice of the theory that the worker is entitled to something more than a wage just sufficient to keep him alive. We have built up in the United States the greatest market in the world because we have been able to attain higher levels of consuming power for the masses. We are told that we must sacrifice this to make secure profits for the international financiers and industrialists. This is the opening of the fight on our economic defenses which have taken form in tariffs equalizing the difference in cost of production at home and abroad.

It is at any rate fortunate that the international industrialists and financiers are now beginning to let the American people in on what is behind the intensive propaganda they have been carrying on. The people can make the decision as to whether or not they are willing to take the chance involved in the effort to sink the American standard to the economic level of the foreign peasant, peon and coolie.

WHAT INTERNATIONALISM MEANS

DON'T BE TOO PESSIMISTIC

Since last fall the country has been going through a period of depression. The condition is of course not peculiar to the United States but is worldwide. Before the depression came so unexpectedly upon us, it seemed that economic rules had been changed and that it was impossible for our progress and prosperity to slow up. We know better now. But now that we have reached the bottom of the depression the pessimism which has been created seems as unwarranted as was the glittering optimism of a year ago. A great many people who were a year ago that business would never slacken, seem to be just as sure now that it has never been so bad as it is and that it will never get better.

This is of course absurd. There have been many worse periods of depression in the country and there are probably plenty of signs that we have wrapped bottom and are about to climb the hill again.

In this regard it is interesting to note a statement issued recently by which says, "While business for the last year was materially lower than a year ago, the profit levels for 1928 were greatly appreciated. Reduction of the first six months show a drop in income of 28 per cent from last year, but profits were less than 2 per cent below those of 1928.

"Thirteen industrial groups now show net income for the half year exceeding their earnings for six months of 1928. They are beverage and confectionery, chemicals, drugs, electrical equipment, food products, iron and steel, oil, printing and publishing, railway equipment, chain restaurant, miscellaneous service companies and miscellaneous manufacturing. House financing, installment sales show profits slightly higher than last year and materially above those of 1928."

All of which should be highly encouraging to those who now seem unduly pessimistic. Evidently the country has not gone to the dogs, and there is bound to be some improvement in the near future. When it comes the rebound will be rapid because of the present buyer's hesitancy.

LOOK TO THE PAST AND FUTURE

Eighty-two years ago, within the memory of living people, gold was found in California. The great trek westward began. The populating and development of the West was the direct result of the discovery of its vast metal resources.

Today the Western states have many industries, many interests, many sources of prosperity. But in many of these states mining is still the principal industry. Such western metals as copper, lead and zinc are indispensable to progress and industrial expansion.

Yet, in spite of its fine record, the mining industry has never been free from attack. Laws have been proposed, and sometimes passed, which have added to the difficulties of operation. Their sponsors have not realized that anything inimical to mining is felt not only by the industry's hundreds of thousands of workers but by all other industries within the state, of which the mines are a leading customer. There has been much agitation to materially increase mining taxes. The recent general industrial depression which was felt severely by the mining industry, is indicative of what might happen if such efforts succeed.

A FAMOUS WAR HORSE

According to the Navy Recruiting Station, Detroit, probably the oldest horse in the service of his country is "Old Tom" who, as a two-year-old colt, enlisted for life in the U. S. Marine Corp as far back as 1894. He went to Cuba with the American troops in 1898 and there served as a personal mount of General Elliott, U. S. M. C., retired. He was with Roosevelt and his Rough Riders when they stormed the San Juan Hill. He is not without battle scars and experience in the art of warfare. He was retired to the marine barracks, navy yard, Portsmouth, N. H., on full rations, several years ago. He is still, at the age of 37, as lively that it took three men to capture him recently when he was turned out in the pasture at the navy yard. Since the department has ceased to provide for him the men at the navy yard have raised the necessary funds to keep him.

NAVY RIFLE TEAM AT CAMP PERRY

Navy Rifle and pistol team, squad of fifty-three officers and men are now completing the season's training at Camp Perry, Ohio. The National Rifle Association matches started on the Camp Perry range on Monday and continued throughout the week. They will be followed by the national individual team rifle and pistol matches next week. The Navy squad is captained by Comdr. W. A. Lee, U. S. Navy, and consists of thirty-three officers and men. For the first time the naval reserve districts will be represented at the matches. A team from this district is now training with the Navy team and will compete against the National Guard.

WHO ARE THE PROVINCIALS?

The summer institutes of government at Williamstown, Mass., and Charlottesville, Va., it will be noted, have been chiefly devoted to lusty knocking of everybody and everything American, and the union of internationalism as contrasted with attachment to American interests.

C. Delisle Burns, professor of diplomatic at the University of Glasgow and former British Minister of Commerce, in an address at the University of Virginia summer institute of politics, lectured the American people on the desirability of studying history from an international rather than a national standpoint. History was being taught, he said, from the assumption that civilization was a local product. America was a new country and it effaced its past in this respect.

Recently an Oregon student who had received a scholarship for study abroad returned from a year's stay in England, where he was classified as a student in Bristol University. He went to England, he stated upon his return, for the purpose of acquiring an American history. To his surprise he found, upon investigation, that the British universities did not seem to know there was such a country as America. Hence they were unable to find an institution in the United Kingdom where special courses in American history were offered.

On the other hand, English history is a subject in which courses are offered in nearly every American university, and even in many high schools. Yet a university student from Great Britain admonishes us that we are too nationalistic in our teaching. We have neither the borders of the United States nor people of British descent, and English speaking people in Great Britain. Yet our history is not deemed of sufficient importance to be taught in English to pupils of more than casual attention to it in the land from whence half so many of our people, so much of our customs come, sprang.

The history of Americans, of course, have a national inferiority complex which causes them to swallow this whole with open mouths. The way to convert a colony of college professors to tell the British what a pre-eminently narrow and one-sided world justify he accused of jealousy, arrogance and bad manners.

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "To atone for sin, to be punished for sin, is a false sense. The Science Jesus taught and lived was to destroy sin, and the proof of his destruction was the destruction of sin, sickness and death, by the supremacy of Spirit, God, over matter" (p. 31).

THIRTY YEARS AGO

The first and severest storm of the season came upon us Tuesday night, and from reports says it is the severest storm that ever prevailed.

Charlevoix can at last claim the metropolitan distinction of having had a genuine "holdup." One evening last week a party of Chicago Club people had been having a lonely party south of the waterworks. A fine voyageur came after them, but could not hold the crowd. John Shaw, Jr., and Stanley Keith followed on foot. On their way up to Main street they met the party of Chicago men who demanded their money. One had a fifth over a dollar and handed it all, which "well, you are welcome to all the money I have with me." The soldiers allowed him to pass, although he had quite a sum of money on his person, and took his fine pedal warbler. The young men could not describe the soldiers.

A very pleasant musical event was the violin recital last Friday evening at the home of Miss A. L. Coulter by Mr. George Newell's juvenile pupils. The occasion demonstrated the fact that Charlevoix will soon have a number of accomplished violinists—the children, mind you. The pupils gave a very elegant little concert and Mr. Newell has reason to be proud of his musical work here.

Had Learned Something From Married Friends

A California license clerk was recounting on the working out of the so-called "Georgia Marriage Law" which requires for a short interval the engaged couple to marry and the actual ceremony itself.

"It has proven a good law," he said, "and indeed a great many of those 'marry-in-haste-repent-at-leisure' cases, I always have in mind the wise little girl who, when an aunt once asked her to marry him, replied:

"'I probably will, but just the same, I want a week to watch to think it over.'

"'You'll have lots of time to think it over after you're married,' the aunt protested.

"'Yes,' the earnest, 'that's what most of the married women tell me.'"

SPORT NOTES

By Newsboy

After a season of roaming, the Old Kid is back on the job again, ready to give you, merely for a change of treating this little column, the most important of the many facts that pertain to the world of sport, both in Charlevoix and in other sports-wise localities.

Among the most important items, of course, is the fact that Chaney will join about scare the life out of some of Charlevoix's more rabid football fans when the new season tangle next Saturday. Of course we don't know anything about the Chaney team, but that doesn't make any difference, because we don't have to know anything about the Chaney team, but that doesn't make any difference, because we don't have to know anything about the Chaney either, except what members tells us, the point that the Chaney goals are over-confident, and pride goeth before a fall.

The Big Ten football teams are getting Charlevoix's attention and started practice last Monday. Charlevoix started practice this year before school opened—a fine idea.

There seems to be a lot of arguing about who is going to win the National League baseball pennant and also the right to be beaten by the big American League Champions, the Philadelphia Athletics. From the way the American League continues to win from the National League Champions in the last few years, we suppose that a much closer World Series would result if they kept the last players from the National League and put them all on one team. Perhaps the Nationals would even win in that case.

MARY ASTOR HEADS BANCROFT SUPPORT

Mary Astor, whose exotic beauty has brought her quick fame in the talkies, is seen in a new role that furnishes the femine half of the love interest, and boasts the supporting play for George Bancroft's newest all-talking picture, "Ladies Love Brutes" which comes to the Palace Theatre Saturday and Sunday.

Miss Astor appeared recently in "The Rough Riders." Since that time she played on the stage in a play in Los Angeles and after the manner of the producer has received four offerings from screen producers.

With her in Bancroft's supporting cast are Fredric March, of "The Marriage Playground" and "Sarah and Son" fame; Stanley Fields, the hard-boiled Detroit gambler of "The Bridge Depot;" Cecil Turner and Freddie Burke. Frederick, child actors who have appeared in a number of productions.

"Ladies Love Brutes" is based on an original play, "Pardon My glove" by Elsa Alling, the wrote "Sarah and Son." The director is Rowland V. Lee, who directed Bancroft in "The Bridge Depot." Both are of the lusty star's greatest plays.

NAVY'S OLDEST VESSEL WINS EFFICIENCY PENNANT

Honors in battle efficiency for the steamer class, 2nd line, have been awarded the U. S. S. Rochester, the oldest ship of the Navy now in active service, for the competition year ending June 30, 1930, according to the Navy Recruiting Station, Detroit. In winning the pennant, the Rochester, which was commanded by Capt. Harry Hubbridge, U. S. Navy, present Director of Naval Intelligence, will have but a short time to wear the pennant, as the vessel, nearly 40 years old, is to be scrapped this fall.

TWO YOUNG GIRLS HURT

RUN IN FRONT OF AUTOMOBILE MONDAY

Two young girls, Iola Bassett, daughter of Dan Bassett and Rebe Eisly, daughter of Gordon Kirby, each about eleven years old stepped from the rear of a truck Monday afternoon directly in front of an automobile driven by Fred G. Bellinger receiving painful bruises and the Bassett girl serious injury, such as will necessitate her remaining in the local hospital, where she was taken for treatment, for an indefinite length of time, or until her leg which was fractured in two places will permit her leaving the institution.

Witnesses state that the accident was unavoidable and that Mr. Bellinger is in no way responsible for the occurrence, that he was driving at a moderate rate of speed at the time and that both girls stepped from the rear of the truck, directly in front of the car, which was about on a few feet away from them. Some say less than five feet.

Charlevoix has been reasonably free from serious automobile accidents during the entire resort period. That there were several accidents of minor nature is true, some can more or less damaged, but personal injuries of a serious nature have been greatly all.

Immediately following the accident Mr. Bellinger notified Sheriff Vaughan and Chief of Police Jeffers on who made a personal investigation of conditions and made inquiry as to circumstances under which the accident transpired. Their report was understood to be to the effect that the unfortunate accident was unavoidable.

NEW LIGHT SHED ON MYSTERY OF LOST DAUPHIN OF FRANCE

CHARLEVOIX HI SWAMPS ONAWAY

BURY OPPONENTS UNDER 39-0 SCORE—PLAY BOYNE NEXT

Charlevoix's football team opened its season schedule in a manner that was very pleasing to the large crowd of loyal rooters that had gathered on the South Side field last Saturday.

The locals turned the swampy but tight and unexperienced Onaway eleven under a deluge of touchdowns, and when we had recovered from our joy sufficiently enough to do any more thinking we found that the final score was 39 to 0, in Charlevoix's favor, of course.

Coach Kuhn used practically every man that was eligible in order to give them all a bit of seasoning. In fact, he looked as though he were favoring his second team a bit, as he allowed the second youngsters to play every minute that the regulars. Every boy that was on the field played courageously, but naturally some stood out more fully than others.

Among the standouts were Captain Bill Clark, Joseph Arvilla, Bob Fischer, Bevere Hall, Homer Stephens, and Harold Ouellet. Clark played a good game defensively, making numerous tackles, and backing them up on the offense. He also did praiseworthy service in setting an interference man over Charlevoix had the ball, but his best play of the day was when he caught a pass intended for an Onaway end, and made it count for a good twenty yards for the Red and White. Arvilla stood out in gaining ground for Charlevoix making over half of the total yardage. He also added up a few touchdown balls that other players had decided were too nice to name on to. Fischer it was who made the ball of the tackles in the open field, especially after the kickoffs. He used the old straight-arm stunt to good advantage when he carried the ball around ends, too, and was a consistent ground gainer also all-around game. His passes were true and his tackling was more, than fair. Stephens gave a good account of himself at fullback, carrying the ball around ends, too, and also making several nice gains through the center, usually played a consistent game.

Rev. Geo. L. Cady, at Congregational Church Sunday

FACTS WANTED

The so-called "power octopus" will be a important part of the forthcoming political campaigns. Eager office seekers in many states have seized upon it as a potential vote getter.

But it is doubtful if the voting public can be beguiled with veiled accusations, generalizations and bluejay arguments.

It is easy to say that electric rates are exorbitant, that regulation has broken down, that the companies are paying fabulous dividends on inflated valuations of their properties—that, in short, the public is being fleeced by an organized, greedy "power trust."

The truth of the matter is that the "power problems" have been greatly exaggerated while service has been continually improved. Rates have decreased to the point where power is a smaller item in the budget than formerly—and the regulation has not "broken down," but is ably being readjusted to meet the tremendous growth of the industry since the war. Leading power executives are giving every aid to state governments to make regulation adequate in every way.

The industry's dividends go to hundreds of thousands of American citizens in all walks of life and the taxes it pays enrich every community.

It may be a good thing after all that power has entered politics—for facts will be brought to light.

Johnson was convicted of fishing with nets of illegal mesh and of setting nets without the proper identifying marks.

Johnson is claimed to have earned the patrol boat when it was engaged inspecting and lifting its nets.

Lansing, Sept. 24.—A fawn was recently killed by an automobile on a road near Wolverville in Ingham County. The fawn was blinded by the car's headlights. It is believed the second fawn, as he allowed the second youngsters to play every minute that the regulars. INFORMATION BUREAU REPORT OF ACTIVITIES

Records of the Charlevoix Association of Commerce, kept by, the Information Bureau for the months of 1929, reflect a falling-off of inquiries made to secure at the Bureau this season as compared with last year—1,225, as against 1,676 in 1929.

However, written inquiries (mostly for hotel and cottage accommodations), which quite a few request for summer employment) answered from the Bureau totaled 299—an increase of 107 over last year, and the names of 126 prospective visitors were listed at the Bureau and forwarded to the Chamber of Commerce of the city for detailed follow-up, while only 87 were listed last year. Inquiries by phone totaled 92 this year, against 45 in 1929, while the total of incoming calls was 511 in 1930 and of outgoing calls 920, as compared with 114 and 456 respectively, in 1929. Of course, the additions of the state license work is responsible for a certain percentage in the increase of telephone calls over last year. Letters written by F. V. Tyler the corresponding secretary this season totaled 298 and, in addition to this, 100 copies of various letters and literatures were made. Postage expense totaled $8.50. This amount also covered the mailing of about 2,000 Charlevoix booklets to folders and maps from the Bureau. From nine to ten thousand pieces of literature were distributed by the Association of Commerce this year, in various ways—mostly from the display table of the information bureau and the balance from the various gasoline filling stations and the hotels. Benjamin, District Club Leader, talks by Warren Shapton and James Bock on club work in the 4-H State Fair and Gaylord Club Camp respectively, remarks on what the parents think of club work by Earl Shapton and songs led by Dorothy Smith. Can I Learn to Fly?

by William R. Nelson

How to Enroll

"CAN I learn to fly?"

"It is natural that question is decided to take a course in running or swimming. They decide not to make themselves acquainted. And it pricked necessary instruction beginning to fail machines, motors and their parts.

Every flight department of Curtiss-Wright is interested in encouraging aviation. I learned first. I have experience in practically every branch of flying. I have commercial, limited commercial, private, transport and other ratings. I have flown, instructed and piloted planes in all parts of the country. In short, I am qualified to speak on the subject.

To enroll for a course leading to a license governed by the Department of Commerce, you must first pass a brief physical examination given by a flying surgeon. Then you are accepted. Two examinations are offered. That of the student who just wants to learn to fly for his business being more comprehensive than that of the student who plans later to fly for pleasure.

The examinations are not considered any matter to prevent a student from ever getting a license. Only those of business motives or those suffering from serious defects of the heart and lungs are rejected.

Flying lessons are of three varieties: private, limited commercial and transport. The private is for those who fly for pleasure only. The limited commercial permits hiring. It is required for those who fly for hire. The transport is the highest rating and is required for those who fly for hire. The latter two examinations are given by the Department of Commerce.

The courses for the private pilot's license generally take from three hours at flying—if inspiration and ability all add up right along. The time for commercial license requires fifty hours in the air. And the transport license requires at least two hundred hours of flying time.

Department of Commerce rules governing approved aviation require students with limited means to work part of their tuition, but no charge in their are stipulated.

The training includes both ground and aviation examinations the written portion covering such subjects as air-plane engines, navigation, meteorology, air traffic rules, etc. Then comes the flying test, which consists of certain flying maneuvers of commercially safe limits.

First Instructions

LEARNING to fly starts with sticking the pilot the correct wrist and elbow pressure the student should acquire soon.

"Don't pretend," cautioned the instructor. "Try instead and always do only, be natural. We instructors will know everything that you do it you will remember to do right on later flights.

I was trained a former this and operating instruments in it. It was a pretentious was examined and on a "Now you will take the controls and fly that and what happened next to the latter."

Stalin Hailed as Lenin's Savior

Moscow (U. S. S. R.).—Hailed formally as successor of the Soviet's greatest leader, Lenin, Joseph Stalin, dictator of the Russian communist party, was lauded by the entire Russian people at a memorial session of the All-Russian congress of soviets.

Stalin, who has been hailed both privately and publicly as Lenin's successor since Lenin's death, was received in a demonstration of the greatest enthusiasm when he entered the hall and the cheers continued for many minutes.

Stalin's speech was a plea for unity and solidarity among the communists, and a warning against factionalism.

"I remember how Stalin joined with Lenin, stood hand and shoulder to the very moment," Zinoviev said in his address in Pravda, organ of Lenin's group in Russia.

The genius of the Bolshevik Russian will has been endowed by the Communist International as it assumes the leadership of gigantic efforts. U. S. Population Center Moves 25 Miles West

Washington.—The center of population of the United States has moved westward 25 to 30 miles in the last decade, census bureau officials have been.

Although it will be several months before census statisticians determine the exact point representing the center of population, it is likely to be found in Hancock County, Indiana, a spokesman said. The population center has been moving westward since 1790, when it was in Kent county, Maryland.

In 1920 the center of population was found to be 10 miles east of Shelbyville, Indiana, the census bureau's last census. In 1910 it was in Bloomington, Ind.

Here's a typewriter or stationery and the writer speaks in words of his other post office back often work, but the writer does not sign his name. He is an unregistered person so that do not know his name.

Possible And think of the advantages! How easy it would be to send the letter to the wife of the man you hate! To tell some people we know frankly just what we think of them. One could threaten without the smallest physical danger, for none knows in particular as to the language he uses.

I have always wanted to tell Greene Bebsell, years ago, that his name is not worth a postage stamp without the use of electricity. His invention was responsible for the same name for many years. EDUCATION AND THE RADIO

Radio, in the United States, has become one of the greatest forces in entertainment. Will we succeed in making it a force in education?

There are nearly one hundred broadcasting stations in the country—and Lew W. Howard, president of the National Broadcasting Company, is authority for the statement that "there is room in the air for all of them." Such a statement seems to us to be unsound.

There are limits to advertising and to the number of broadcasting stations which can be handled in the air without a serious interference. Engineers in charge of broadcasting stations have already complained that they have had to move their stations from one wave length to another in order to avoid interference. Some of the broadcasting stations have been forced to go off the air entirely because they could not find a wave length which was not already occupied.

Mr. Howard points out that many of the broadcasting stations are licensed to operate with only 100 watts power. This power is entirely inadequate for the average station. A 50 watt station, with a wave length of 500 meters, is limited to a service area of about 25 miles. Many stations are licensed to operate with 500 watts power. With such power the average station can not broadcast more than 50 miles. Many stations are licensed to operate with 1,000 watts power. With such power the average station can not broadcast more than 100 miles.

Mr. Howard points out that the broadcasting stations which are licensed to operate with 5,000 watts power can broadcast only 200 miles. Stations which are licensed to operate with 50,000 watts power can broadcast only 500 miles.

The purpose of the law, of course, is to give every person in the United States the right to receive broadcasting. But the theory has not worked out in practice. Instead of broadcasting stations being licensed to serve communities, they are licensed to serve individuals. Broadcasting stations are owned by individuals, by newspapers, by churches, by colleges, by department stores, by manufacturers, by automobile dealers, by hotels, by real estate dealers, by undertakers, by politicians, by theatrical companies, by clothiers, by jewelers, by druggists, by grocers, by bakers, by candlestick makers, by anybody and everybody who has the money to buy a broadcasting station and the ingenuity to get a license.

A LESSON FROM GERMANY

An interesting phenomenon and economic problem is presented in Germany, which is confronted by an unemployment problem of considerable magnitude, even though the country has a gold basis and a stable currency.

Mr. Kinnard points out that many people in this country are inclined to blame the industrial depression and the unemployment problem on the fact that the country has been on the gold basis. Germany proves how fallacious such reasoning is. Germany is on the gold basis. Germany has an advantage of self-containment—as many people as possible, in the entire world, are employed in the country

Is the "Lost Dauphin" Mystery Solved?

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

One of the most absorbing mysteries of all time, a mystery which from time to time for many years refuses to clear up, is that in which the fate of Louis XVI and Marie Antoinette of France, a prince of royal blood, who, although he was known in history as Louis XVII, never reached man, who is supposed to have died at the age of ten. He is perhaps better known as "The Lost Dauphin" than as Louis XVII and the story of the beginning of the tragedy is familiar to most of us. Briefly, it is this:

After the heads of the French monarch and his queen rolled down the guillotine, their son, the eight-year-old Dauphin, was held as a prisoner by the power of the Temple in Paris by the revolutionary government. The boy was kept in close confinement and soon his sister, Marie Therese, who a prisoner, was never permitted to see him. The French republic, some of whose men had been humane enough to show pity to rats and even lost baseness to dogs, cats, poultry or even baby children, has condemned the "King Louis XVII" and on June 17, 1795, the revolutionary committee announced that after a short illness "Capets well" had died.

This account of the Dauphin's fate was poorly arranged and only during the restoration and the reign of Napoleon, was secret after the Bourbons had been restored to the throne for the period of their legal rule. It is true that there was considerable effort on the part of the royalist faction that the Dauphin had not died in the Temple but that he had been secretly removed to certain quarters and was still living. Along with these rumors came the first of the cases of "pretenders" who were to help to regularly, each in person or have it claimed for him that he was "The Lost Dauphin." One of the most famous of all these pretenders was the Prussian watchmaker, Karl Wilhelm Naundorff, who came forward with his claims in 1810.

Naundorff there has appeared a new book on the Lost Dauphin, in which efforts are made at establishing identification as to the latter by the famous pretender. It is "The Shadow King," by Idelle Budd, published in London, Germany in 1933 and recently published in this country by the Bruckman, Clarke company. It is based upon original documents, many of which have hitherto been unknown to historians. The "shadow king," as King Louis XVII and Marie Madeleine, and Jane Sorrie in this work, is the name given to the boy Karl Wilhelm Naundorff received during his lifetime only on one of the many occasions he came into fame.

The first part of the book is devoted to proving that the real Dauphin was actually rescued away from the Temple and another child, a deaf mute, put there in his place. In addition to the support of the latter that the boy who died there was not the Dauphin is based upon those facts that the Dauphin was darkened to have died of scrofula, although there is nothing to indicate he had. In cases of rickets, incidentally, a former authority on the subject has written, "A crooked tongue calls for just a few drops to start its action. Many mothers claimed no rest could get a word from them, whenever doctor that the little patient had proved reliably, that castor oil alone could not relieve the pain. Castoria is a vegetable preparation — entirely free from narcotic and powerful medicine. Castoria is the children's remedy. Mothers have used it for over 30 years. Physicians in their private practice have endorsed it. Millions of babies and children have been benefited by it. Don't experiment with your baby's delicate system. Use Castoria. Always look for the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher on the wrapper.

Naundorff's appearance on the stage of history took place a century ago, but the name has been in the public eye almost continuously since. Within a few years after the pretender's death the children, as well as Naundorff's legal followers and friends, were divided into two camps, one group under the leadership of the Prussian government of Frederick William III, and the other under the leadership of the Bourbons. He was able to show a number of personal marks such as a mole in the shape of a pigeon, which had been supposed to be the distinguishing mark of the Dauphin. He was able to show a number of personal marks such as a mole in the shape of a pigeon, which had been supposed to be the distinguishing mark of the Dauphin. He also showed that he was left handed, as the Dauphin was left handed, as the Dauphin was left handed, and that he had been trained to the throne for the period of their legal rule. It is true that there was considerable opposition to Naundorff's claims, but the opposition was not the strongest of all these pretenders was the Prussian government, and during Naundorff's life he was never given quite the side of rule to the throne. In addition to the circumstance that both he and his eight children all bore a striking resemblance to the Bourbons, the handwriting, following the characteristics of the Bourbons. He was able to show a number of personal marks such as a mole in the shape of a pigeon, which had been supposed to be the distinguishing mark of the Dauphin. He also showed that he

By Newman

The local football team is now well started on the way toward a fifth rating in the Class C football race. Whether the final standing will show Charlevoix tied, second or third is not worth while to settle at this time. With the full strength the team has been enjoying, combined with the loss, but the loss of Novak and Red and White would undoubtedly have won, but the loss of Novak and McCall, right at the start, is liable to hamper the passing attack of the Kipke machine.

Bill and Bob participating in the Cadet Championship in golf, and naturally won first and second places and consequently were awarded prizes, which was "according to the rules of the state Athletic Association. Someone reported the matter to headquarters and the boys were declared ineligible. The fact that they did not know that they had committed a wrong, or the fact that they had immediately returned the prizes, when they were told of it, so, but apparently little effect with Bill Orr in charge of the case. They will therefore be held ineligible for the balance of their high school career, if the ruling is sustained.

Although their loss to the football team will be considerable, it does not begin to compare with the loss of their playing to the basketball team. Practically the whole team extends its sympathy to the boys, but no effort will be made then will make the loss apparently little effort with Bill Orr in charge of the case. They will therefore be held ineligible for the balance of their high school career, if the ruling is sustained.

A WORKMAN'S PARADISE?

The statement if often made that there is no unemployment in Russia. This is belied by official soviet figures. The percentage of unemployment among Russian industrial workers is vastly higher than in the United States or in western Europe, while the wages are pitiable.

The soviet government's official figures for 1929 show 1,320,000 workers employed in 65 Russian cities. The industrial activity is centered. Sim is the percentage of actual workers in industry in Russia to the agriculture. population is slight as compared with that in the United States, the industrial unemployment is vast greater. Unemployment in Russ has been reduced by introducing the five-day week and the seven-hour day, that wages are in a far greater proportion. According to the testimony of the head of the Amtorg Russian trading organization in the United States), the average weekly pay of workers in the textile industries is 35 rubles, or 18 dollars a week. But the purchasing power of the ruble has fallen heavily, and in adjoining countries it circulates at most below par. The price of the necessities of life run from three to four times the American price. Workmen are not allowed under existing governmental regulations to buy more than 15 rugs or seven pounds of meat a month.

CONFESSIONS—INFORMATION

Baked pears are a pleasant variation from baked apples. If the flavor is not very pronounced, a little lemon juice will help it.

Under ordinary use a floor needs resawing only two or three times a year. Lapping on such work is a common mistake. Oil should never be used on a waxed floor as it soften the wax.

Shoes that are too large are a source of discomfort and danger. The foot is not snugly supported, and the shoe does not fit properly on the heel, and stockings are needlessly worn into holes. Shoes should be correctly and carefully fitted.

Soft and sweet, judiciously used, is a good combination of flavors. Sweet potatoes go well with ham, tongue, and other smoked meats. Jelly, and spiced preserves are good with beef. So-called beef flavoring pickles sugar and salt on a cracker, Swiss saltine crackers with a fruit salad.

HOLD-UP AT GREENSKY HILL

J. V. PANGBORN, LOSES MONEY WATCH AND CHAIN

Two men, one young and from no business exhibited, probably un-experienced in the hold up game, the other older and confident in his action, forced J. V. Pangborn a salesman to the side of the highway at the foot of Greensky Hill early Tuesday afternoon, relieved him of $14 he in currency, a watch and chain, after which they gave him orders to drive up the hill and continue traveling along U. S. 31 and cautioned him not to look back or attempt to get the license number on the credit car.

At the time of the holdup Mr. Pangborn was driving from Boyne City to Petoskey. He was at the curve near the bottom of Greensky Hill when he found the road blocked by a large car and two men armed, facing him. They were compelled to get out of his machine and "hands up" speedily followed. The order was obeyed and an instant later Mr. Pangborn felt the pressure of a revolver in his side, this in the hand of member of the two highwaymen, while the younger and excited chap pro-ceeded to relieve the victim of his cash and watch. Having thus accomplished the bandits gave the orders for Mr. Pangborn to continue and this, too, without taking time for making special observations.

The men were in masks, were not disguised and apparently made no effort to conceal their identity. A description of the pair given in congress with but little information of a definite nature for officials to use in their efforts to capture the offenders.

While the hold up was in progress another automobile party drove by but did not stop, possibly their attention was not drawn to observe that a hold up was being perpetrated.

A RULING BY ATTY GENERAL

FOR SAFETY REMOVE OUT-BOARD MOTOR

The thrill hunter who detaches his outboard motor and lays it in the bottom of the boat while he plays, is not violating the law, in the opinion of the office of the Attorney General.

The Law Enforcement Division of the Department of conservation has recently received a request for ruling on this question from local sheriffs and field officers, some contending that a motor had to be moved to a raft before a boat could be considered as anything else than a motorboat. Others claimed that with the motor detached the boat was no longer a motor boat.

The Attorney General's office takes this latter attitude.

It would not be a violation of the statute prohibiting hunting while motorboat during such times as said motor is upon any kind of floating device or other stationary propelling by using an motive power, (steam gas, gasoline, oil, gasoline, or electric) if the individual should be found to be hunting duck while in a row boat, sail boat, canoe or paddled or outboard motor detached and in the bottom of the boat, the opinion states.

THREE DAYS OF RAIN AND THEN FROST

The saying "three days rain and then a frost" has a little basis in fact says the Weather Bureau. The weather conditions preceding a frost is fall and spring frequently are an area of low barometer, overcast skies and rain but not necessarily three days of rain, as a matter of fact three consecutive days with such are of very infrequent occurrence. After the low barometer passes an area of high barometer with cold northerly winds comes on, and if the sky be clear, the wind light and the air relatively sufficiently low, frost is imminent.

LOCAL GRIDDERS LOSE TO BOYNE

BOYNE GOT THE BREAKS AND MADE THEM COUNT

The Charlevoix High School football team received its first taste of what we hope will be its only defeat of the present season when Boyne City proved to have given them its share of luck in the annual meeting last last Saturday afternoon on the South Side field.

Referee John Ferens of Traverse City took charge of the scrap and did his work in what we believe was a conscientious manner.

Charlevoix was represented at the start by a lineup composed of Arzilla, Farmer, Clark, and Anne in the backfield, with Novotney, McSmoky, Warner, Stuaman, Coulter, Struthers and Bird Lidding the line.

Boyne City had the wind with them in the first quarter, and it was blowing strongly. Boyne was content to engage in a punting duel and gained ground on every exchange due to the breeze. Charlevoix, of course, tried to advance the ball by running plays, but met with strong defense on the part of the opposing team. A Charlevoix punt was finally blocked near Charlevoix goal line and Boyne City progressed it on a couple of line rushes. The point after goal was missed when the dropkick was a couple feet to the left of the uprights. During the remainder of the quarter the play was even, with both teams trying hard, but neither gaining very much ground. Arzilla was the only consistent ground gainer for Charlevoix. He averaged over five yards every try, but he was not used often enough although the Boyne City

TOP O'MICHIGAN POTATO APPLE SHOW

The Premium Books of the Top O'Michigan Potato and Apple Show, to be held at Gaylord on October 29 and 30, are being mailed this week and show a slight increase in premiums offered this year over any previous year.

With the changed Junior Department and an additional class in apple-preparation list this year, including cooking and special awards, premiums total over $1700. The potato lists mentions ten to largest with over $200 offered in all potato classes, both adult and junior divisions.

The 30 odd growers of the Top O'Michigan should not hesitate to exhibit because their potatoes are small. The dry weather has greased over all of northern Michigan and prizes awarded will be small this year. The chances to win prize at the show, however, are as good, if not better than in before, according to H. C. Mellenamp, Secretary.

The last from the Top O'Michigan Always Goes to the Potato and Apple Show in February. With the very best potato crop in southern Michigan, all winthers at the Top O'Michigan Show should have an opportunity of winning at the Gaylord Show and of showing the State Show winners that the Top O'Michigan Potatoes are supreme.

Write to your county agriculture agent or to B. C. Mellenamp, Boyne City for a premium list and entry blank if you have not already received one. Plan now to show by selecting potatoes at digging time.

BARK-BEETLE HARM FRUIT

CAREFUL PRACTICES LESSEN INJURIES DUE TO THIS PEST

East Lansing, Sept. 30.—Unseasonable injury to fruit trees in Michigan is caused by the bark beetle which tunnels in the cambium layer just beneath the bark but this injury can be considerably lessened by careful orchard practices, according to the entomology department of Michigan State College.

This insect preferably attacks wood which has been injured or which is weakened by disease but occasionally the borer becomes established in healthy wood. When the borer has been able to make extensive galleries beneath the bark, the numbers of the insect increase rapidly and individuals move to other trees to establish new colonies.

Brush which has been removed by pruning and left in the orchard, wood cut from fence rows and stored near orchards, or wild cherry wood that has been cut and left on the ground make ideal quarters for the establishment of colonies which may attack fruit trees. All such prospective quarters for the borer should be burned.

Orchard trees which are so badly infected by the borer that the leaves are dying should be removed and burned to prevent the migration of the borers to other trees. Orchardists should go through their orchards for use in building smudge fires should never use brush taken from fruit trees.

Cherry and peach trees are attacked more frequently than other Michigan fruit trees.

RAIN LAST DAY OF THE FAIR

GOOD EXHIBITS, FINE RACES, ENTERTAINMENT FEATURES

Three fine days and one rainy was the experience met by many fair officials during the four day meet, held last week.

The attendance and receipts are reported slightly short of that of 1929, while an increase is noted in the premiums awarded to exhibits, making for a small deficit for the society.

Exhibits in all departments exceeded the number displayed in former years as well as meritorious in quantity making for a superior showing and in this regard better than was anticipated by fair officials.

Entertainment features were many and these, too, were pronounced up to those in charge of the department finer than in past years.

The several races were put on in good shape and participated in this feature of the fair speak highly of both trotting and running demonstrations.

SEVERE STORM SWEEPS LAKE

SHIPS LOST, LIVES LOST, SAFETY IN THIS REGION

A rain storm of extraordinary proportions visited this region last Friday and this was accompanied by high wind and more or less of an electrical display. But little if any damage resulted from the storm in this immediate section.

The storm was general throughout the State and at several points a heavy loss was sustained, by way of damaged buildings and crops. In some district orchards were hard hit. In some localities the apple crop meets with fully a fifty percent loss.

Loss of three ships on Lake Michigan is reported and several lives lost when the ships went down. There is no reported loss to shipping interest in this region aside from delays when most ships were either in some harbor or were under the lee of some one of the several islands of this part.

Damage to shipping interests, loss of ships and life was confined to points some distance south of this port.

The S. S. Sanford due to weather conditions remained in the harbor at St. James from Friday until an early hour Monday morning when the ship was forced to return to the harbor for refuel trip. Tuesday the Sanford started out on her regular run on her regular schedule, although the weather was not normal. Heavy seas and some wind was encountered, but only such as permitted the run to be made in safety, otherwise Captain Chambers would have remained in this harbor safely sheltered from any wind that sweeps Lake Michigan.

"SET" GUN UNLAWFUL

JOHN SALMINEN UNDERSTANDS IT NOW

A "set" gun, an ingenious deer trap discovered by conservation officers in the woods of Marquette County, cost John Salminen, Marquette, the most severe penalty inflicted on any conservation law violator in Michigan this year.

Salminen is now serving a term of six months in the Marquette County jail, sentenced by Judge Frank Bell in the Marquette circuit court.

Salminen had salted a stump and had rigged a rifle as a stand so that a deer advancing to the salt lick would push a cord that would set off the rifle.

As the party neared the depression Thomas Unwin looked around on his brown. His efforts to win Enid had been Thomas's most active manifestations yet, and yet none to Penelope. His one step in whatever direction seemed to call forth the wrath of the nine Gallowhills relatives. Why he, an utterly unknown quantity, should be considered by Enid to be capable was how Vera put it, a desperate villain was quite beyond explanation.

"I thought the doctor capable of that," she said, frowning.

"He's capable of anything," Thomas Unwin replied. "You don't know what we've gone for, you women."

"What does the man mean?" she asked of Enid.

"I said to settle the affair," he said. "There can be question of evading what he had done or declining responsibility. We found that Ormond plundered to secure Enid we are holding him for the police. You remember, he wouldn't let me use the wireless? That was because he didn't want to be caught. He spoke for a week to anyone in New York than if would be in London."

"Where is the doctor?" Mrs. Bird was asked.

She followed them to the bridge. The attack had been made in the dawn, and Enid had no idea that Hammer's blow had been so severe or that so much blood had flowed from the wound. He tried to prevent Mrs. Hammer from seeing the man. She knelt down at his side and removed the rag.

"Are you very much hurt?" she asked. Her heart was beating wildly. After all they had betrayed him. There were tears in his eyes. She could see that he did not disentangle her from those of the lad made the assault.

"They carried out your orders most successfully," he said, and turned his aching head away

MASSACHUSETTS INSURANCE RATES RISE

Rates for compulsory automobile liability insurance in Massachusetts will show an average increase for 1931 of six per cent, according to State Insurance Commissioner Marston G. Brown.

Mr. Brown discusses that the number of automobile involving personal injuries last year increased over 1930, the compulsory insurance law went into effect and that the number of hold-up claims has increased at a faster rate than accidents. Accidents reported increased 12 per cent during the first 11 months of 1931 to 41,814 in 1930 and the number of persons killed during the same period increased from 16,698 to 17,109.

A new law providing forfeiture of his registration for any driver of an automobile involved in a fatality, beginning January 1, 1932, is one of the compulsory automobile insurance features most favorable to the public, Mr. Brown says. He explains that under this law, "unless some contemplates wrongs unintentionally, he is punished in the same manner as the premeditated wrong-doer."

Commissioner Brown also suggests as the underlying psychological lessons of accident insurance:

"That the personal liberty of automobile owners is such that compulsory insurance is unjustifiable;

"That the power manufacturers for motorists legally to 'manufacture' new appeals. They put "rodeo," "new" and "comfortable" into designs into their cars, contemplating things until they were costly and we. The Public Service is becoming 'gentlemanized.'

"All this it will be seen goes back inevitably to the hands of the public.

"Industrial advancement and after all are only from the bottom up. Invention and discovery are human reactions.

"Then we read in the Outlook that Thomas Edison, the biggest industry and labor in the United States today is to get down to earth and to the level of the people."

NOW HOW DID HE FIND THAT OUT?

Samuel Derwitz, of Kentucky, died recently after a visit to Europe that was made at the request of his physician. Upon his return to his home in Louisville, Kentucky, he was examined by the latter and found to be in perfect health. Derwitz died in his sleep the first night after his return.

Time has again demonstrated that the sound investment is one based on actual values and not on hysterical figures and not on legislative fiats.

RESPECT FOR LAW

The greatest need in this country today is improvement in the attitude of citizens, especially the younger ones, and Chief Justice Hughes in a recent address, most important, pointed out that the remedy lies in the hands of the people themselves. Many changes in procedural methods have been suggested and adopted by the bench and bar, but the fostering of respect for the law itself, and the manner, also of the primary safeguards of life and property against aggressive criminal assaults, against the inhumanities of our methods for the apprehension of crime. WOMEN FOSTER CONSERVATION AND EXCEL WITH ROD AND GUN

While women may not have hung up as many records with the rod and gun as men, they were ardent conservationists decades before man aroused them to vote—campaigning to save the trees and fl...ning flowers around their homes and dwellings according to Miss Frank M. Warren, chairman of the committee on water and waterways of the General Federation of Women's Clubs.

"I think that the women of America are perhaps more interested in preserving the beauty of our lakes and streams and rivers than to any one other thing. Women are greatly interested in the preservation of our wild flowers and also in the reforestation of our country. In almost every state some freedom of great scope is under way, and American women are playing no inconsiderable part in bringing these conservation measures to a successful conclusion," Mrs. Warren said.

The women gunners and anglers are on an increase throughout the United States is shown by fishing and hunting license figures compiled by the American Game Protective Association.

"It is not an overwhelming night to see women hunting for fun or sport. Numerous reports come to the Association of women who have bagged specimens of the biggest game to be found. Some of the most successful game breeders in the country are women."

"The ideal of conserving our natural resources—our wild life, must be taught in the home and school. Without the help of the American home and the teacher in the schools, conservation remains but a vague and impractical thought while the child is maturing without the inspiration that comes from a knowledge of the outdoors, trees, flowers and wild life."

While shows that when people want to fight they will fight whether they have weapons or not. There is a lesson in this for us. There is a lesson in this for the nations. The most brutal and barbarous wars in history, taking even greater the number of men engaged were fought in the days when the war club was regarded as the latest thing in implement of destruction. Even the world wars now entirely disarmed and somebody wanted to fight, they would still be plenty of rocks and baseball bats handy. Unfortunately the urge to fight cannot be stimulated by statutory enactment.

THE THEATRE

Both Dorothy Mackaill, the popular blonde First National star, and William A. Seiter, one of the most noted directors of the industry, consider the talking pictures a boon to acting hopefuls.

Also united in this belief in the "Strictly Modern" a lively First National Vitaphone comedy drama opening its local engagement at the Palace Theatre next Saturday and Sunday. Miss Mackaill and Seiter were unanimous in telling an interviewer

"Instead of inflicting a hardship on players of the stage and screen, the talkies have made and will continue to make two actors, like two blades of grass, flourish where one has stood before."

The veteran of stage actors, on the one hand, hasn't crowded out the silent film actors because, according to Miss Mackaill,

"There is a new field created by the invention of the talkies, and a double demand for pictures, so there is room for both."

On the other hand, Seiter sees no serious menace to the stage in the growing popularity of the talks for many reasons, principal among which are vaude, short vaudeville acts and so on, as well as dramas.

"Hitherto in the present generation the stage has only flourished in New York, Chicago and a few other large cities," he points out. "I expect to see the talking picture cultivate a nationwide and a world wide taste for the sort of entertainment that only metropolitan folks can fully enjoy now, so that there will be a demand for flesh-and-blood plays as well as pictures in towns of all sizes."

"Strictly Modern" is said to be a fast-moving tale about a young American young woman novelist, who tries to live the life of the heroine of one of her unconventional novels. Complications ensue.

Sidney Blackmer plays opposite her in the picture, and Inez Courtney and Sidney are Julanne Johnston and Warner Richmond. Morgan Bennett, the famous bell ringer, also has an important role.

The story is based on "Cousin Kate," a successful stage play by Hubert Henry Davies. Ray Harris is the director who wrote the screen version.

QUEEN EVENTS HAD ALICE DAY PUZZLED WHILE MAKING FILM

A real-life mystery that puzzled the Hollywood police for a week before Alice Day while she was playing opposite Jack Mulhall in First National's "In the Next Room," a mystery thriller talks that is to open at the Palace Theatre, Wednesday and Thursday.

Every night, while Alice was trying to study dialogue for her part in the picture, one or more of the following things would happen.

A police or private ambulance would arrive, summoned by a mysterious telephone call that informed that Alice Day was ill.

An orchestra, starting to play from Sid Hoyt's Hawaiian trio to a 14-piece affair would report for work at her "house," which she knew nothing about and naturally demand pay for making the trips.

The arrival of unsummoned taxicabs was a nightly occurrence.

The police answered four separate calls to the home in the first few nights, from as many different stations, but after that they left a guard at the door and answered no more calls. Whoever the hoaxer was, he escaped.

Miss Day declared that Eddie Foy, famous comedy director, who was filming "In the Next Room," was just the sort to do it "for the fun of getting me in the right mood for this mystery picture." Foy, however, denied it.

An unusually strong cast appears with Mulhall and Miss Day.

In their bound form they are ideal for any boy who has a scientific bent.

ITALY USING FIAT ENGINES IN SUBS

For the first time in Italian naval history, her submarines have entered into the Mediterranean from the Atlantic. The Milleire and Torricelli, the former of over two hundred tons displacement, which they made a 15-day passage from, at the end of which they emerged and remained down for 48 hours. Milleire steamed 18,000 miles in one year. These submarines are each powered by four Fiat diesel engines developing 1,400 brake horsepower at 380 revolutions per minute. The Brazilian submarine Humaita, built in the same city, covered the same distance in three months less than the Italian ships.

team would have been grateful if he had not been used at all. The quarter ended with Boyne leading, 6-0.

The teams changed goals for the second and third periods, but this did not help Charlevoix, as the wind died down every time either team had to punt. Charlevoix failed a few passes which were nearly all completed, but the runner was nearly always tackled with only a short gain to his credit. An exception was when Arvilla gained nearly ten yards on a pass from Anse. No scores were made during the second quarter, but it seemed that Charlevoix could at least even up the matter during the third frame, as the boys were fighting hard. But the best laid plans often be ruined. The hopes of the Red and White fans were scared up when a terrible hail-storm came on during the third period. This made the field very muddy and a couple of gently fumbles kept the locals from making the all-important touchdown. The boys kept on trying for their touchdown in the fourth quarter, but they lost the ball on downs and Boyne took the ball from their own 20 yard line. Boyne City quarter back to the right behind a wall of interference and run to the five yard line where the Boyne player was forced to run sideways. Three plays put Boyne across the line. Boyne City once more by a series of good plays, managed to get the ball within good scoring distance, and then "Mike" Rouse of the Boyne quarterback, made his way through the entire Charlevoix team and kicked for a field goal. Some of the players of the losers were fouled, but the backfield men were not. In fact, there were three of them right near the receiver of the pass when it was thrown, and two of him jumped into each other. The Boyne City players caught the ball and stepped across the line for the six points. The game ended soon after and Boyne was found to be ahead by the score of eighteen to nothing. The game makes the local boys even up in games won and lost, but they are still far ahead of all their rivals in the number of points scored. They ought not to lose any more games, although the Harbor Springs team should give them a close run.

Arvilla was the outstanding player for the locals, while Captain Donald Claiy, Foster, Blied, Struthers and Coulter were also doing their share. Powers played well on the defense, and with more experience at the past, will be second to none in the district. Last year he was an All-Conference player, and no doubt he is now in the backfield position, he should make good. He was a good tackler, and good ball-carrier and is a good general. Despite the loss of two good men by the ineligible route, we are still backing the boys to win at least second place in the Class C Conference. Although there will be no chance to meet Boyne again this year Charlevoix could still tie for first place if Harbor Springs beats Boyne and the locals beat Harbor.

There will be no game this coming Saturday, because of the Teachers' Institute. The game with East Jordan was played Wednesday afternoon at East Jordan.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS
Frank P. Litschert

In the United States when there are hard times the tendency is to blame the party in power, whether the party is responsible or not, and to take it out on the candidates at the polls. In South America they have a different system. There they seem to believe in direct action, and instead of voting out the government, some natives are apt to gun it out by armed revolution. The present depression is world wide, and the evidence that South America has not escaped is evidenced by the overturning of the governments of Peru and Argentina during the past few weeks. There are rumors of trouble in other Latin-American countries, even in Brazil, which native has had few internal difficulties during the past decade or two.

The most important overturning perhaps was that in Argentina. Her foreign trade, to speak in approximate proportion, is twice that of Brazil and five times that of Chile. In 1929 we exported more than $200,000,000 worth of goods to the South American republic. At the same time, Argentina is Uncle Sam's most serious rival in the New World for foreign trade. This is because Argentina, in the southern temperate zone, raises approximately the same crops that we do.

Perhaps partly for this reason, the United States is less popular in Argentina, than in any other South American nation. Congress for many years has sought to protect the American farmer against the importation, into our own country, of corn, meat products and other farm products of the lower cost from the United States. The duties were increased by the tariff bill passed this year. Many Argentinians have always criticized these tariffs and especially embargoes which have been laid against Argentine products from time to time because of the fear that the foot and mouth disease and other pests might be introduced into the United States. It is only fair to say that at least a part of this propaganda against the United States has not originated in Argentina but has been scattered there by European news agencies and European interests which have been anxious to cement discord between our country and Argentina in order that as much Argentine trade as possible be diverted from the United States to Europe.

As a result of trade rivalries and this hostile propaganda against America the relations between our own country and the Argentine Republic have been strained for the past several years. Irigoyen, the president of the republic recently deposed, was particularly unfriendly to the United States. He withdrew the Argentine ambassador from Washington more than two years ago, and has sent no one to replace him. When the non-arch Pan-American conference was held in Havana in 1928, the Argentina ambassador refused to be delegated to it. Irigoyen opposed some of Mr. Hughes' proposals made for the good of the conference on behalf of the United States. And during the conference it seemed that the Argentine delegates were doing their best to embarrass Uncle Sam. And again Argentina refused to be represented at the Pan-American conference on conciliation and arbitration held at Washington in 1929.

Will the unfriendly premiership no longer the head of a government and it is freely predicted in Washington that the new government, if it survives, will be distinctly more friendly to the United States. All of which is well and good and highly encouraging. No one has claimed that Irigoyan was put out of power chiefly because he was unfriendly to the United States. But suppose opposite conditions had been true and Irigoyen had been a traditional friend of Uncle Sam. Then when he had been deposed we would have heard a shout from one end of this country to the other, from free traders and other internationalists, to the effect that Irigoyen's friendship to Uncle Sam had been fatal to him and that he was a victim of indignation over our new tariff. Only the fact that Irigoyen was not our friend has saved us from a barrage of hot air of this kind.

WILL THE PRINCE OF WALES MARRY IN AMERICA?

There is a possibility that a "royal line" may be established in America through the marriage of some American girl with the Prince of Wales, Frederick L. Collins, of Woman's Home Companion, believes after a visit in Europe. Many modern and Edwardian in democratic America even hope that this will come true, Collins says.

In England it is being stated everywhere that former restrictions against the Prince's marriage to any other than a royal princess have been removed, the writer says. He may marry whom he pleases—"even," as they so characteristically put it, "an American."

The writer cites the freeing of the Prince as an example of what is happening to royalty throughout Europe. It is becoming liberalized. It was believed at the end of the World War, this things would be different with no kings. Collins says, but one day the world realized that there are still kings; that royalty withstood the shock of the War quite as well as other institutions and their better than some. What royalty lost in the removal of the Emperors of Germany, Austria and Russia from the pictures, it gained in growing popularity of other monarchs and their heirs who are now growing to the age when they may be called to take the throne.

By WALTER TRUMBULL

George, famous toastmaster at the Mammoth, came to New York from one of the lusty isles of Greece, by way of Constantinople. George is so crammed with gruellingly everyone who enters his dining room, so when Frank Case, owner of the hotel, was seen eating there one day which he never had seen before, he asked George the customer's name. George replied that he was Mr. Somebody.

"What does he do?" demanded Mr Case.

"He writes books," replied George. "What kind of books?" asked Mr Case. This eminent tonsure, not early for a moment.

"Just books," he said, with a finality which closed the subject.

Frank Case was escorting to Holly wood a writer who was dropped in ask ing.

"Say, do you find much you can use in a book that starts on 11 Eddie Fay check in it and terminates the final tell ing of said the time is the wee three o'clock in the morning?"

"You know, I've even live there!" mused Mr Case.

James Montgomery Flagg was driving down Long Island to visit friends at East Hampton. He also lost his way, but finally arrived, in a state of some indignation.

"They should find some other name for those Long Island towns," he said. "Hampton gets a little wearing. I've been to South Hampton, West Hampton and Hampton Dunes. Now I'm here in East Hampton. The fact is that I have visited all the Hamptons except Bon Hampton and Walter Hampton."

Many visitors to New York, buried, by the grace of Wales, manage at one time or another to get to Long Island, which is a body of land on sports surrounded by water. That this history goes further back than the formation of the United States is illustrated by the fact that the horse and all the record was kept to disprove about the front of the continental grazier. Hails from the south and the tropics that he chooses Indian tribes gave their names to the streets, towns and counties of Manhattan, Bronx, Staten, Manhasset, Patchogue, Ossining, some of the early settlers of Nantucket which took its name from the Indians, and Montauk, Point, Shinnecock, Massapequa, Flushing, also are Indian terms such as Canarsie, Jamaica, Hempstead, Hackensack and Weehawken, Secaucus and Nassequogue were was Hawkins Hempstead and Hempstead Harbor, Hempstead are many bits of a dozen more families, other than Dutch, gave their names to streets.

Long Island streets has been a great source for singers and writers. Take for instance the town of Bellport named for that old sea captain and writer, Christopher Prince Bailey, whose famous novel, Dave Hilliard, Mary Holt and Hollister Harper and Lucrece Overton Hollister and Mrs. James and Mrs. Wilson Preston, F. D. Woodhouse, Heywood Broun, Ernest Lawson, William J. Claussens and Everett Shinn. Such actors as Harry Warner and Ernest Lawford have resided there. Elmer Sperry, of gyroscopic fame, lived there. Bernard Baruch spent some time there, as did Arthur M. Hopkins. This well-known producer now has a summer home at Great Neck, where he can exert any play merely by calling the names of actors from the porch of the golf club.

The toward the further end of the island at Easthampton, you will find homes belonging to Irvin S. Cobb, Irving Lardner, Percy Hammond, and Grantland Rice. Arthur William Brady has a place there. Tom Wilson, also, was at Easthampton was the home where John Drew lived for so many years. I used to sit on the porch with this actor while he told the stories of now which he was proud, request to school horses to jump to the adjoining lot.

By WALTER TRUMBULL

George, famous headwaiter at the Algonquin, came to New York from the city of the happy isles of Greece, by way of Constantinople. George is accustomed with practically everyone who passes his dining room so when Frank Case, owner of the hotel, saw a man eating there one day whom he could not seem before, he asked George the customer's name. George replied that he was Mr. Sarnoff.

"What does he do?" demanded Mr. Case.

"He writes books," replied George. "What kind of books?" said Mr. Case. This stumped George, but only for a moment.

"Just books," he said, with a timidity which chilled the subject.

Frank Case was motoring in Holly wood a short ago, and stopped to ask his way.

Just go up that road until you come to a house that looks as if Eddie Foy lives in it and then take the first left turn," said the young man who was directing the traffic.

"Any trees, Foy over the fence?" asked Mr. Case.

Peconic Bay, Sag Harbor, Quogue, Canoe Place, Montauk Point, Napeague, Amagansett, Bridgehampton and Noyac are other Indian names. Setauket, Patchogue, Brookhaven and Oyster Bay, of course, were founded by white settlers, but the Dutch left their mark on Flushing, Jamaica and Hunting ton.

Long Island always has been a good place for artists and writers. Take for instance the case of Bridport, named for the first old sea captain and settled by Thomas Pell. There, at various times have lived Mary Roberts Rinehart, Wayne and Laurence Hall, Jr. Hall Woodhouse, Heyward Brown, Ernest Lawson, William J. Glackens and Everett Shinn. Joffre Monument to Be Comrades' Gift

Paris, France.—Marshal Joseph Joffre, who is living in retirement on the Mediterranean coast at the Monte Pinet, refuses to have anything to do with the plan to erect a monument to himself in the Champs Elysees. He has written a letter to the committee in charge of the affair, which is to be unveiled on the tenth anniversary of the victory of the Marne, in which he says:

"The erection of a monument to the victor of the Marne would be a tribute to the devotion of the citizen-soldiers who fought for the liberation of the country, and I am deeply touched by the thought. But I am convinced that the best monument to the memory of the dead is that which they have built with their own blood—the reconstituted country. Let us not waste money on stone and bronze. Let us devote it to helping the living dear to the hearts of those who have fallen for the country."

Marshal Joffre suggests that the money be used to help the families of the dead.

Can I Learn to Fly?

Up in the Air

IN THE air for the first lessons the student is "following through" on the controls as his instructor puts the plane through "straight" flying maneuvers.

"Don't look at the controls," some thought my earphones. "Watch out there on the wings and tail. See how little the control surfaces move now, and you soon the slightest motion will partly. Keep a sharp lookout for other planes. Learn to pick them out against the background."

We were a mile and up. My instructor pointed out the landmarks of the Roosevelt railroad, a landyard, a large golf building. Then he moved the stick backward slightly and we began to climb. Next the stick went forward to neutral and we leveled off. Next he pushed it forward and we "were over a hill" and began to lose altitude. A right turn, then over to the left and then a forward push and the plane

"Now you do it. I'll explain as you fly. Time to the right."

I shoved the stick to the right more or less. The plane banked sharply, too sharply.

"Now bring the stick back to level it out, good an figure."

Then I was given the controls for a left turn. That too was so much for the left. Nature does the rudder work for us in turning, we are told. It doesn't work. Not the rudder. Forty.

Let the left hand be in charge and hold me to point the stick back to the as it should go. As I did so the plane began to lose some of its forward speed, a sensation commonly it. I was told to push the stick forward. I did, gently, and we got to the level. "That was a good, not perfect," explained. "Now let's try a left turn." I started to do it, but the plane was not responding as it should. I was using too much rudder and not enough bank. Now I was getting the hang of it. I was told to put every few seconds on the instrument board and watching my instrument. Try to hold each turn to the altitude at which you started. Through the plane's controls I felt it.

Turning and Leveling

The turn, right and left, and level ing, with the plane responding to my movements through the controls, were accomplished with increasing ease and assurance, although not perfection and one would be.

Turns of greater or less bank, in which we climbed different steps I "figure eights" and "lazy eights" and all sort of maneuvers with the aim of learning the stick, the engine and the rudder to work together.

Today I took to some instruments and occasionally. Then the time is for my flights. Then I can begin to solo flights. Then I can begin to solo now," he said through the mouthpiece of the earphones. "Then we will be headed off at 7000 feet. My instructor rose in the air, circled, and came to a perfect landing. Then he climbed out and I was given the controls. I was told to take off and circle the field. I did so, and then I was told to land. I did so, and then I was told to take off and land again. I did so, and then I was told to do it again. I did so, and then I was told to do it again. I did so, and then I was told to do it

BEAVER ISLAND NEWS

MRS. DONLEY PASSES

Word was received here a few days ago, of the unexpected death of Mrs. Ann Donley, at the home of her son in Kalamazoo, Michigan.

Deceased, as she was from girlhood up until 1895 a resident of the island, this community extends its deepest sympathy to the bereaved family as if it has lost another of its esteemable pioneers.

During her residence here she made many friends who will regret to hear of her death. She was a very amiable lady possessing a sunny disposition radiating sunshine and good will to all.

Those of us who knew her in the early days, marveled at the manner in which she continually bucked up on the bright side of everything, are the silver lining in the dark clouds as it were, even in the face of trials and tribulations.

Her charming personality coupled with her native wit, made her a favorite with all who had the pleasure of her acquaintance.

She was on different occasions the leading spirit in the many, social and charitable functions, that took place on the island in the early days.

Being a gracious and entertaining hostess, therefore any social event which was to take place at her well furnished home, was looked with delight by young and old, and as the time grew nigh, for the people to leave for their respective homes, they felt somewhat reluctant to do so, and could only do so with the promise of our hearty, even to the extent of disconcerting herself and others, in order to be at the bedside of some such neighbor.

Her presence in the sick room with her ready wit and dry humor acted like magic and did more to alleviate the persons sufferings than did the doctor's medicines.

Ann Rogers was born in Dubuque, Ireland and while yet a young girl her parents moved to this country and settled in Manchester, Pennsylvania.

In 1865 at the age of nineteen she came to Beaver Island, where she met and married John Donley, who passed this life a number of years since. She was the mother of nine children, six of whom are still living a credit to the community in which they live.

Mrs. Elizabeth Tucker, Mrs. Sarah Lown, and Jack of Kalamazoo, Dan and Charles of Chicago, and Mrs. J. E. Bruns, of Miami, Florida, she is also survived by one sister, Mrs. Teresa O'Kelly of Bayfield, Wisconsin.

Burial took place in Chicago, and we trust that upon the last pages of her life that the Angels have written "Peace."

An airplane from the Hammond Flying Service of Owosso, Michigan was here Thursday piloted by Major D. Hammond, who was accompanied by E. B. Wing of St. Ignace and Linle Graham of Owosso. Major Hammond may bid in the winter a big mail service between Beaver Island and Charlevoix.

John Vandenberg, after a month's visit with the parent, Capt. and Mrs. Harry Vandenberg returned Thursday to Houghton to resume his studies for the year.

TRANSFER OF FISH WAS SUCCESSFUL

Experiments to overcome the lack of food supply and surplus in lakes where fish are overcrowded, which retards propagation, by removing excess fish from lakes that are overstocked to lakes that are understocked are being made by the state conservation department.

An example is the transfer of 700,000 small pike, by the Wisconsin conservation commission from Lake Mendota, which is overcrowded with perch, into lake Monona, where supervisor has shown that perch grow to a large size, says the American Game Protective association news service.

All of the perch were taken with one haul of the net on the beach near the outlet of Lake Mendota. The net was 2,100 feet long and the total haul measured less than half a mile.

The fish were dipped from the fish mesh seine into a live box which had been compartmented by chicken wire at the Madison hatchery. The live box was then towed through the locks in the Yahara river and set at the outlet of Lake Monona. Here the end gate was opened and the fish allowed to swim out of their own accord. Both were inspected by the Izaak Walton league and state officials.

Fishery experts claim there is an overabundance of perch in Lake Mendota and that by thus removing part of the perch excess are enough to start to grow to a large size.

"INSIDE" INFORMATION

Serve hot foods hot and on hot plates. Serve cold foods cold—and take pains to do it accurately. Many housewives ignore this simple and obvious detail of an attractive meal.

Apple butters may be made with or without cider and is a good means of using up windfall and other imperfect apples that cannot be canned to be saved. The U. S. Department of Agriculture will tell you how to make it.

The starch washable materials for kitchen curtains may be made more tarly in or near the heading to allow for shrinkage. Dotted swiss, percale, gingham, glass toweling, organdies, or Japanese crepe are suitable materials for the sun.

To make old-fashioned cream rice pudding put a tablespoon of washed rice in a baking dish with 1 quart of milk, 1 cup of sugar, 1 teaspoon of nutmeg or cinnamon, and 1½ teaspoon salt. Cook very slowly in the oven for 2 or 3 hours, stirring often. A cup of raisins may be added.

Water containing iron can usually be improved for laundry purposes by adding a little limewater or washing soda to the water. Stir it thoroughly, let the iron settle to the bottom and draw off the clearest water. It is better to filter the water through cloth or other material.—U. S. Government Bureau.

INCREASE OF SWAN

Although swans are said to be very slow breeders, data given concerning the whistling swan family have increased along the Atlantic coast from less than 1,000 in 1918 to the approximately 28,000, according to an estimate of Jack Miner, bird authority of Kingsville, Ontario.

This increase is said to have resulted from the strict protection given the birds following the signing of the migratory bird treaty with Canada.

By entering the swan to the western end of Lake Erie during the migration period, Miner has saved the lives of hundreds of swan which would otherwise have been swept over Niagara Falls. The annual destruction of swan at Niagara has been large in years past—American Game Protective association news service.

Investigating Source of Radio Interference in This Vicinity

Mr. C. L. Extension of the Michigan Long Distance Telephone Cable System

Pitching northward at a rate of several thousand feet a day over the hill inches from Grand to Big Rapids, Michigan's newest long-home highway is one of the big construction projects being carried on in the state this year. It is a storm-proof cable, being built by the Michigan Bell Telephone company at a cost of nearly $1,000,000.

The cable is designed eventually to span the state to Mackinac City Besides carrying the long distance telephone circuits to the upper peninsula via that point, it will provide greatly increased long distance facilities for the industrial and resort section of Western Michigan and extend the eastern-state cable now connecting the most important points of the eastern, southern and central sections of the commonwealth. Reaching upon wire circuits, it also will assure increased protection for the service against interruption by storms and wind agencies. The project, according to F. L. Johnson, manager for the Michigan Bell company in this area, is in line with the company's policy of not only building in advance of actual need to fill adequate service can be furnished, but also of improving the plant and service constantly.

Big State-Wide Program

The Michigan Bell company is pushing work on one of the largest state-wide construction programs in its history. Included in the work is the erection of new buildings, extension of switch exchange and long distance cable and the addition of central office apparatus at many points. The telephone construction program is providing work for many men throughout the state. In addition, the use by the company of large quantities of Michigan materials is giving employment to many people.

The new cable will connect with the company's long distance system through Grand Rapids, at the south, and the new central office building now under construction in Big Rapids, at the north. At the Grand Rapids end, also, it will join the present northern terminal of the trans-Michigan cable, increasing its length to more than 600 miles. It is expected the Michigan Bell company, in an open filed-lout when the storm was at its worst, encountering sheets of spray that drenched the men to their skins and battling waves that frequently were thirty-five feet in height. At times the entire crew was enveloped in heavy walls of water.

All members of the crew were old skiers and big hosts of rubber, the latter quickly filled with water and the wearers sloshed holes in the bogs and feet of the boots so that the water could escape.

Captain Palmer has not been well for some time. Regardless of his physical condition he assumed his position in the lifeboat and throughout the long hours of the night and under dangerous conditions continued to direct the rescue work until the work was reached. The crew returned to Ludington a few hours later, when Captain Palmer and his crew were tendered a great ovation by Ludington citizens.

RABBIT SOON PHEASANT LATER

Just a few days more and sportsmen can try their luck on rabbits. The season opens on the 15th inst. and closes January 1st. Regulations permit the taking of five in any one day—ten in possession and a limit of fifty for the season. Ruffed Grouse and Prairie Chicken season opens on the same date, lasting from October 15 to 20. Limit five in any one day—ten for the season. Pheasant shooting opens October 25th and closes on the 31st. Limit two in any one day—four in possession and four for the season according to 1930 regulations.

Captain Palmer and his crew circled eleven hours, from 4:00 p. m. to 3:00 a. m. searching the area from the mouth of the Muskegon River to an open life-boat when the storm was at its worst, encountering sheets of spray that drenched the men to their skins and battling waves that frequently were thirty-five feet in height. CLOSE GAME ANTICIPATED BY EXPERTS; USUAL LINEUP

The local football team is out for revenge from the Mancelona "7-14" for the punishment it has been forced to almost from the teams of our own rivals on the other side of the lake. The Red and White outfit journeys to Mancelona this coming Saturday and a close game is anticipated by those who like to prophesy on the outcome of a game that is so likely to be determined by luck as otherwise.

The way the experts reason is a long and roundabout one, as anything but reasonable. Mancelona and Gaylord played a scrimmage the two weeks ago, there being no game. Petoskey had a two-one-two, with Harbor as a little better.

Charlevoix ought to finish in third place, with a little luck. The boys have had their share of bad luck, and now we feel that it is time for a change.

Last Wednesday the Red and White team played a close, hard fought tilt with East Jordan on the latter's field, with the final score being 6-6. Charlevoix's usual lineup was in the game, although a few minor substitutions were made in the

IS FRIEND OF THE FARMER

PHEASANTS PAY WELL FOR THEIR KEEP

Pheasants feed on 100 different species of insects as well as nearly 100 kinds of seed and plants, a year's study by the department of entomology of the South Dakota State College shows.

In a report by Oscar H. Johnson, and fish commissioner of that state, declares that the pheasant will eat almost anything digestible which is found in a wide range from farm and other species of cattle food.

The study referred to is a careful examination of the crops of 285 specimens collected in all parts of the state at times of the year.

Plants and seeds found in crops included foxtail, wild buckwheat, pigweed, smartweed, lambsquarter, sunflower, wild rose, wolfberry, Russian thistle, wild oats, corn, wheat, oats and barley as well as leaves and roots of numerous other plants.

Insects identified in the pheasant crops included cutworms, army worms, many species of caterpillars, chinch bugs, tarnished plant bugs, buffalo tree hoppers, aphids, seed corn beetles, wire worms, white grubs and their larvae, ants and the grasshoppers.

Examination of 23 pheasants examined in a Pennsylvania study, it was found that only one bird had taken grain. The principal bird's crop contained only five grains of corn as against 11 beetles that are enemies to tillage crops. Hundreds of beetles, including many Japanese beetles, and large quantities of weed seeds were found in eighty birds. Cornkrnals were found in the gizzards and crops in the pheasants studied.

While pheasants do eat some grain it is usually waste grain picked up on the crops have been made. During the summer when insects are plentiful the birds seem to prefer them to grain. The pheasant pays the farmer well for his keep.

THE FIGHT FOR SUCCESS

One of the most important lessons in life is that success must continually be won and is never finally achieved. There are those who look upon the supposed fortune in our social efforts, who have achieved places of influence and distinction, as though they had in some way gained a citadel in which they stand secure against every attack. In truth, all we they have done is to gain another level of responsibility in which they must make good. Every day is one of test. Every day puts at risk all that has been gained. The greater the apparent achievement the greater the risk of loss. The farther you have climbed the more disastrous the fall. As has well been said, it is not worth while to talk of the end of a period, for you are always at the beginning of a new one. You cannot rest content. You have been vigilant. It remains to be yet more vigilant. You have been faithful, but fidelity to an active station which demands its daily sacrifice of any counter interest, its daily response in energetic service.—Charles Evans Hughes.

Captain Palmer and his crew circled eleven hours, from 4:00 p. m. to 3:00 a. m. searching the area from the mouth of the Muskegon River to an open life-boat when the storm was at its worst, encountering sheets of spray that drenched the men to their skins and battling waves that frequently were thirty-five feet in height. At times the entire crew was enveloped in heavy walls of water.

All members of the crew were oil skins and big boots of rubber, the latter quickly filled with water and the wearers sloshed holes in the bogs and feet of the boots so that the water could escape.

Captain Palmer has not been well for some time. Regardless of his physical condition he assumed his position in the lifeboat and throughout the long hours of the night and under dangerous conditions continued to direct the rescue work until the work was reached. The crew returned to Ludington a few hours later, when Captain Palmer and his crew were tendered a great ovation by Ludington citizens.

CHARLEVOIX PLAYS MANCELONA NEXT

CLOSE GAME ANTICIPATED BY EXPERTS; USUAL LINEUP

The local football team is out for revenge from the Mancelona "7-14" for the punishment it has been forced to almost from the teams of our own rivals on the other side of the lake. The Red and White outfit journeys to Mancelona this coming Saturday and a close game is anticipated by those who like to prophesy on the outcome of a game that is so likely to be determined by luck as otherwise.

The way the experts reason is a long and roundabout one, as anything but reasonable. Mancelona and Gaylord played a scrimmage the two weeks ago, there being no game. Petoskey had a two-one-two, with Harbor as a little better.

Charlevoix ought to finish in third place, with a little luck. The boys have had their share of bad luck, and now we feel that it is time for a change.

Last Wednesday the Red and White team played a close, hard fought tilt with East Jordan on the latter's field, with the final score being 6-6. Charlevoix's usual lineup was in the game, although a few minor substitutions were made in the

ARMY PLANE INSIGNIA CITIZENS INTERESTING HERALDRY STUDY

The next time you see a United States army airplane, look on the fuselage and see what emblem is painted there. It will be a different one for the different branches of the aviation corps, depending upon whether it belongs to a pursuit, attack, observation or service group. Do you know the difference between those four and what is the meaning of the insignia?

If you don't, be sure to read the illustrated feature article "Insignia of Our War Birds," by Elmo Scott Watson in this issue of The Sentinel. You'll find that they offer an interesting study in a new form of heraldry and that there's a lot of thrilling American history contained in these symbols.

NEW DANGER FROM THE AIR

DANGEROUS MENACE TO OUR WILD LIFE

Air transport is a new and dangerous menace to game. While it is unlawful nearly everywhere to hunt from an airplane, transportation to and from hunting fields by air is coming more and more into the favor with sportsmen.

While air travel by sportsmen can not be criticized as unethical the fact remains that it increases the hazard to game, will increase the toll and in fact will more climactic to the maintenance of a supply of wild life.

Air transport companies are advertising that the new ease of travel, "saves time" "saves expense" "saves labor," and puts one quickly and easily into game haunts inaccessible to pack train or auto.

"While there are new thrills to be experienced in soaring over forests and lakelands seeking virgin game lands," says Carlos Avery, president of the American Game Protective Association, "much of the romance and joy of the game hunted and killed by primitive methods of travel by pack train, on foot and by canoe are lost. Not a veteran sportsman and woodsman will be reluctant to abandon the forest trail for the paths of the air. A great part of the satisfaction of the hunting comes from the experiences, of camp and trail."

Much of the benefit from hunting comes from the physical exertion required. To the seasoned outdoor man a hunting trip made any long hours in an open cockpit and despoiled the air is more aerial hunting expedition.

LISTING SUNDAY SCHOOL PUPILS

The members of Charlevoix and vicinity were visited last Friday by representatives of the local Sunday Schools listing the children and getting the church preference.

Invitations were left urging all to come out October 5th designated as Go-To-Church Sunday and Rally Day.

A tabulation committee has grown of the cards according to church preference and an effort will be made to have all the children enrolled in the Sunday School chosen.

NAVY COSTS EACH AMERICAN ONE CENT PER DAY

Recently in a nation-wide hook-up Assistant Secretary of the Navy Ernest Lee Jahncke, stated that the Navy costs each American approximately one cent per day. His speech dealt with the great influence that the Navy has had in the building up of various American industries, especially steel and radio. "The steel industry," he quoted Andrew Carnegie as saying, "

With Stick and Rudder

THINKING one evening recently on the subject of hands, feet and eyes, and some of brilliant, I suddenly was now to me that, after twenty years had attempted, I had certain I would never be able to follow. Unless my eyes do greatly improve in focus or something.

"I mean, I want not to mean I mean using both sticks and rudder," she explained more than before she started. "To date, right now this minute, in the right seat of the same plane, I can fly with the right foot pretty. While I am using both hands as much as you either necessary for the stick bring me down back to earth and hold the plane with the rudder."

I must to at that we said two planes when the three wentworth suddenly. I'm a nothing I could not tell where we were or how to get back. Then I was headed. Further I could become frightened I hit the controls loose and my instructor spoke through the phones to me in my ears.

Maybe both mechanics fairly slow and firm. Don't bend the stick over so much or we will continue, nothing this a rest. Now you'll again the other direction.

I set the road down to several and continue three. So that is if we do someone of visible and left center I'm knowledge standard idea last. My instructor had been teaching me hands or lessons—to watch horizon and my instrumentals.

He took charge and operated three times first after which I completed rest time of times.

I made the turn after a fashion, but that was again. For a amateur at a safe straight chair, at his command seems right again. At a safe straight about he called for another right turn and after I made it, my the motor to setting was signaled for a glide.

OFFICIAL RACKETEERS

The Baltimore Sun points out, in a recent editorial, that some of the members for the state are basically crime in its character, as indeed is all of strong political support. Judges and prosecutors are elected by the people of large cities and counties, and it is necessary for them to be responsive to the wishes of those who have elected them. Otherwise they would be subject to impeachment, says the Sun. But the most important check on the crime racketeer is not a political one. It is the practice at all law courts throughout the country of the defendant in criminal cases to be represented by counsel. The judge who commits to the bail bond is not in consequence of not the agent of the racketeer.

This side of the crime problem has been given a new importance by the recent astonishing exposures of the powers "police" of magistrates' courts in the New York City courts. Under the guise of charges and counter charges of perjury and bribery, the real issue has been brought to the surface, which is that of exercising these powers in other cities. The parallel is an obvious one.

ASK A POLICEMAN!

Another outrageous and distressing case of police brutality and disorderly will be revealed by the passage of more legislation which gives to the police the duty and privileges of law-abiding citizens.

PERTINENT QUESTIONS

The Indiana Taxpayers' Association recently directed a series of questions to all candidates for public offices. The questions covered a wide range of tax matters, including assessments, collections, and the duties which candidates know they will be called upon to perform whether they are elected or not. Candidates for the legislature were asked whether they would support the proposal for a constitutional convention to revise the tax system, and whether they would favor the submission of a sales tax measure to the voters. Candidates for governor were asked whether they would favor the submission of a measure providing for the repeal of the gasoline tax and the automobile license tax.

The questions will say that not all candidates will answer them, but a large number of the farmers, and in the interest of the farmers, but as in the case of the questionnaire sent out by the Association of Commerce, they are of interest to the general public. Whether the candidates answer them or not, they will be required to think about the matters which the questions cover, and that is a step in the direction of educating them and the people to the problems involved.

ASK A POLICEMAN!

The police now has at the service of capital which the ordinary citizen does not possess. Under the caption "Unsolved Crimes" in the Detroit News appears the following:

CHAPTER I

Mr. Mazaroff

If Dora Trelis Hewitt were dead she would be the most talked-of woman in London society, even in her present retirement. Her name would be in the lists of fashionable people, her movements would occupy paragraphs in the society papers, reporters at all times would be seeking admittance to her house, and the whole world would be full of her doings. But Dora Trelis Hewitt, having married a man who, for the sake of whom she loved, was content to pursue a career of obscurity, was in possession of one fact which, if known, would have made her the most talked-of woman in London. Dora Trelis Hewitt was dead. It was given out that she had died in Switzerland, after a short illness, and was buried there; but the world, with the exception of a few friends, knew nothing about it. Only Hewitt himself and those friends knew that Dora Trelis Hewitt was dead, and that the woman who lived in her house, and who was known to the world as Mrs. Hewitt, was a complete stranger, who had been engaged to personate the dead woman.

Hewitt, a man of means and of leisure, had married Dora Trelis when she was a young actress of great beauty and some talent. He had married her in the face of strong opposition from his own family and friends, and he had married her because he loved her. He had loved her for her beauty, her charm, her talent, and for the sympathy which she had shown with his own artistic tastes. And he had loved her for herself, for her own sake, for the sake of her own personality. He had married her, and he had taken her away from the stage, from the world in which she had lived and moved and had her being, and he had settled down with her in a beautiful old house in a beautiful old garden in a beautiful old village, and there he had lived with her for a few years of perfect happiness. Then, suddenly, she had died, and he had been left desolate.

Hewitt was not a man to show his feelings. He was a reserved, self-contained man, who kept his own counsel and his own secrets. He had shown no sign of his grief when Dora died; he had shown no sign of it since. But those who knew him best knew that he was a changed man, that he would never be the same again. He had loved Dora Trelis with all the strength of his strong nature, and he had lost her. He had lost her, and he had settled down to a life of solitude, a life in which he would see no one, a life in which he would have no friends, a life in which he would have no interests, a life in which he would have nothing to do but to mourn the dead.

Hewitt had been living this life for a year when he received a letter from a man named Mazaroff. He knew no one named Mazaroff, and he was surprised that a stranger should write to him. He opened the letter and read it. It was a short letter, and it was written in a peculiar hand. It was the letter of a foreigner, apparently, and it was written in a peculiar style. It was a letter which Hewitt found it difficult to understand. It was a letter which he read over and over again before he could make out its meaning. It was a letter which he finally threw into the fire, and which he thought he had destroyed. But it was not destroyed. It was found among his papers after his death, and it was read by those who had to look through his papers. It was read by those who had to look through his papers because it was found to be addressed to Mr. Mazaroff. It was found to be addressed to Mr. Mazaroff because Mr. Mazaroff was the name by which Hewitt knew the woman who lived in his house, the woman who was known to the world as Mrs. Hewitt, the woman who was not Dora Trelis Hewitt, the woman who was dead.

The letter was dated from a village in Switzerland, and it was written by a doctor. It was a letter which informed Mr. Mazaroff that Dora Trelis Hewitt had died in Switzerland, and that she had been buried there. It was a letter which informed Mr. Mazaroff that Dora Trelis Hewitt had died in Switzerland, and that she had been buried there, and that her husband, Hewitt, had been informed of her death, and that her husband, Hewitt, had been informed of her death, and that her husband, Hewitt, had been informed of her death

Bobby enters it in "Jones against the field," with the field running out second best.

The baseball World's Series is now all over but the shouting, except about this and that player who was a hero even though he had done nothing spectacular to distinguish himself. Even though you did pick the loser in making your bets you must admit that the better team won, and if you picked the winner, you should agree that a little luck might have changed everything, but what of it.

Because you did not know that Babe Ruth, the King of Swat, was a good pitcher before he became an all-time slugging star and that he pitched the ball so well for the Yanks that the manager had to move him into the outfield to win for him himself, there is no reason to chide then, he has made quite a name for himself, and gets big pay for serving expert advice and testimony on the baseball diamond, and if he has repeatedly said that baseball is the best in the world if it had some good pitchers on it. Many people said that he was just trying to pass the buck, and that he didn't know half when he was talking about it, but he knew what them he did. He pitched the last game of the season himself and won it, although he had two days' lame arm as a pitcher, and had not pitched for ten days before the contest to get his arm in condition. For instance if we said that players X fumbled a ball for no reason whatever and that the coach ought to get an expert coach to take his place, the coach would give us a bloody nose, and a player X and his friends and relatives would come down and the coach preparing the writer for the hospital. Or, if we said that although Joe Arcilla is a good fullback and has always been said to be quite as good an all-round player as Jim Thorpe used to be, every player on the Charlevoix team would pitch a fight with us. So you see we have to praise up the local boys and we have to say that they are lucky whenever they make a good play.

Golfing experts used to say about whether Bobby Jones or Walter Hagen was the greater player, but the finally consensus of opinion is saying that Jones was the best amateur, and that Hagen was the leading professional. There is no reason for us to who is the world's best golfer, but the question could be considered even second best. The Jones boy has won very unfortunate for him to the world, all in the same year, golfers in the world who have or will have played against the bowls on the gridiron. The opposing players risk getting hurt and bushed, while the malicious letter-writer only risked having a letter dropped in a waste-basket. Well, it all goes to prove that the pen is mightier than the sword, as Napoleon might have said if he had talked English. Of course this is probably not good reasoning on the writer's part to try and overlook the size of his friends, but who cares what size they are when they are a good sport, anyway? We are all strongly partisan and which in favor of the local boys anything to be said about them, but we should not be able to see out of either eye, if we partially said what we think of the player's mistakes, or if we tried to compare them with well known All-Americans. For instance if we said that players X fumbled a ball for no reason whatever and that the coach ought to get an expert coach to take his place, the coach would give us a bloody nose, and a player X and his friends and relatives would come down and the writer

How to Taxi

AIRPLANES do not stop when taxiing, along the ground because they are afraid. The motorless plane is a queer contraption.

Now I want you to last and we will instruct half through the phone connected to our ground. To start soon the throttle wheel, while the plane begins to move, then use the motor sound. Never test hastily.

"Use your rudder things to watch for ground obstructions other planes, crank wires, pedestrians and never a "dead spot" in front of you. Contrive to turn this way, then one or two points are enough enough to prevent the plan from stalling.

I myself can remember one of my first solo flights. I was in school and my instructor had given me instructions and cautioned me to be careful. My instructor, thinking the radio engine back just forth across the wind-screen of me from the propeller making the radio engine sound like the last throes of a dying man. The instructor started to hollow.

"In the same time, I noticed the wind right, but not the left one. I looked through the propeller. Was about to open the throttle when right rudder into the plane to the right and the ground seemed to rise from the plane toward it like a flash.

I did not remember anything after that until I found myself in the hospital with a fractured skull and a broken leg. I had taxied my plane directly in front of the hangar and had run over my own propeller. Result: a total wreck.

Having the ground how to taxi safely and could practice it safely before we attempt to take off. Let us say that we are pointed about two miles from the field and about 1,000 feet above it. We are headed in the direction we want to go.

Let us suppose the landing field is to our left. Before we attempt to turn we look behind us to see that no other plane is coming up from behind us. Then we look ahead to see that no other plane is coming toward us. Then we look to the left to see that no other plane is coming up from that direction.

If all is clear we start a left bank. We push forward on the stick. A left bank means that we will have a left sideslip component of the left rudder pedal to keep in your course," my instructor said. "That is necessary to offset torque caused by the propeller. Kick the rudder quickly and at the first sign of turning. If the nose starts to swing right, kick left rudder. If left, kick right rudder. But do it quickly and accept it as necessary. Keep the wings level. Don't climb too rapidly."

We headed out, made our turns about the pattern, and cut the motor in lifting for the glide to land. He made the landing with me "following through" on the controls.

The Correct Take-Off

MODERN engineering science is the child of the modern world, and experience is the mother of invention and constructive genius. That applies to flying machines, which began from huge payloads to the ground. As we pushed on ahead, I was interested to see the sixth scene have history to me, too. It was the day of the first aerial meet. If not held forward. As it reached speed we lowered the elevator control, then were in the air and climbing slowly.

Soon the speed level, kept the rudder pedals unevenly. If the nose seems prone to drop, use the elevator to keep ahead of that and back over them, after bringing the controls to normal.

Holding a definite course with on the ground and in the air is important. Just as I got the plane back on the course a wind "smote" and in making the sideslip necessary of the wind to offset it the I'd forget about the rudder and the nose of the plane would veer to one side or the other.

"You will notice you have to hold pressure on the right rudder pedal to keep to your course," my instructor said. "That is necessary to offset torque caused by the propeller. Kick the rudder quickly and at the first sign of turning. If the nose starts to swing right, kick left rudder. If left, kick right rudder. But do it quickly and accept it as necessary. Keep the wings level. Don't climb too rapidly."

We headed out, made our turns about the pattern, and cut the motor in lifting for the glide to land. He made the landing with me "following through" on the controls.

The Portal of Peace is a massive concrete structure that spans the border gateway. It is located at Horse Wash, and was dedicated September 3, 1921, in honor of the peace between the United States and Canada, which had lasted for more than 100 years without a break. "In two days after the discovery, said the work right, but not yet out of the ground. Although the gold was coarse, the gold was fine, and right rudder into the plane to the right and the ground seemed to rise from the plane toward it like a flash.

REGULATORS NEED REGULATING

Unless the law and casualty insurance companies can solve the problems which have resulted in increasing costs of doing business, the law will demand regulatory legislation, according to the conclusions reached in the report of the committee on Acquisition Costs of the National Convention of Insurance Commissioners at an extra-legal annual meeting.

The members put most stress on public regulation, the committee would suggest which would not only solve the problem of increased costs of doing business, but would also

OF INTEREST TO TAX PAYERS

H. A. Starrett, 201 Starrett Land Company Bldg., Detroit, who is Chairman of one of the largest political organizations in Wayne County, the "Committee of 61" of the Property Owners' Protective Association, attacks the Wayne County committee as follows:

"It is unfortunate for the people outside of Wayne County in the midst of the reapportionment amendment that is to be voted on on November 3 that a reapportionment necessary at all to the advantage of Wayne County and much to the disadvantage of the rest of the state has become law—my eyes for all the necessary gone to the methods that are being used in Wayne County to put over this proposition across.

"The 'committee of 61' and they will always have been for fair play, whether we are galaxy or party in politics. The upstate counties may not know it, but the auditor of Wayne County informed me that the County of Wayne is paying into the Treasury to take the tax money and turn it to this political campaign to influence the rest of the State. They are sending out political propaganda to every voter in Wayne County. I do not know when action the County Auditor of 61" may take but I think everybody in the state should be informed of this. If such action is permitted, similar methods will be adopted for some support we might on occasion appeal from outside in the newspaper field. The use of the taxpayer's money to crowd down the throats of the people the view point of the politicians in power. This should be sufficient warning to you that some fiends together and to us in your guard. Think of it, Wayne County's tax bill against the home owners was actually increased this year under those trying conditions and this tax money is being used to politicians for such purposes.

ENCOURAGING SIGNS

There is one bright ray of hope that has been generally overlooked in all the pessimistic discussion of the business depression. The cost of living is now six per cent lower than it was last year at this time and is at the lowest point since 1918. In other words, general wages could have dropped more than five per cent without affecting the buying power of the worker.

Also, it has been brought out by a number of experts that the employment trend, which was downward for close to a year, has taken an upward turn. The coming winter will very probably see industrial activity improving.

WHO WOULD PAY THE BILL?

In its declaration of principles for the Congressional campaign of 1930 the Socialist party makes unemployment insurance its first plank and advocates insurance for old age, sickness, maternity, accidents, infirmity and death. Its platform, among other things, also favors immediate nationalization of banks, insurance companies, railroads, power mines, water power sites and power systems.

SHALL WE PROLETARIANIZE AMERICA
By George B. Lockwood

The question which faces us, particularly vexing in the current sessions of the league of Nations and one which has created a great deal of acrimonious debate, is the question of tariffs. There seems which recently startled the world by to be a sharp disagreement on this its sharp prediction at any cost. It seems growing out of the experiences of Germany's popular vote.

In other words, to overcome the agitation for tariffs and the raising of tariff walls and immigration policy is a mass, or a fit in to maintain our high standards. ... ing against the rest of the world, and I think we are wrong on both.

Then we see the international socialists, the international communists, and the international capitalists are each following according to a consistent end—all having the object of gaining world-wide power in the ... ation of American interests. The international capitalists have only one animating motive—that of immediate profits. The socialists and communists more intelligently see at the end of the road the goal described by Hitler, the proletarianization of America's politics following an proletarianizing of America's population through its ending of a standard under which for generations we have maintained in the United States an increasingly higher standard of living for the masses than has prevailed elsewhere in the world.

Between these two extremes of internationalism lies the traditional nationalism of the great mass of the American people, which must ... ntinue if America is not to drift into the distinctively either of Fascism or of Bolshevism. Shall we want drift into control by ... ism such similarities as those which rend Europe today? American leadership makes the clear note of American nationalism for which millions of Americans are waiting!

TAXING THE IRON HORSE

During 1929 the railroads of the United States had to transport 100,000,000,000 tons of freight and 7,000,000,000 passengers one mile in order to derive sufficient net revenue to pay their taxes alone. Expressing it another way, it required the service of 60,000 miles of line, with its equipment, 2,000 locomotives, 521,000 freight-train cars and 12,000 passenger-train cars, to produce the $420,000,000 in taxes paid by the railroads in 1929. In other words, the total amount of taxes necessary to earn one year's taxes.

Since the 1911 and 1920, railroad taxes increased 307 per cent, while revenues paid to stockholders increased only 29 per cent. Taxes between 1920 and 1928 the population of the country doubled, the total ... ational wealth increased 254 per cent and railroad taxes showed the ... ame increase of 127 per cent.

Railroads make a tremendous contribution to the general prosperity of the country. In 1929 they purchased 23 per cent of all soft coal, 20 per cent of all timber, 12 per cent of all steel and 10 per cent of fuel oil. They employ hundreds of thousands of American citizens.

To tax any industry to the breaking point is the height of folly. The railroads are the arteries of ... ation's business. To tax them ... is what is being done with the railroads. We expect them to do ... best transportation service in the world at the lowest price, without ... ing excessive taxes.

Will we tax the iron horse to ... death?

DID YOU EVER STOP TO THINK
By Edson R. Waite

Jas. G. Anderson, Editor of the Neosho, (Mo.) Daily Democrat, says:

"Did it ever occur to you that you are paying your competitor's advertising bill, as well as losing to him many extra dollars of profit?

"Suppose you have 500 steady customers and your competitor also has 500, neither of you having done any advertising to get them. Then suppose your competitor goes into his local paper with a nice-sized regular ad, well written up and telling the public of attractive merchandise at fair prices—perhaps at prices the same or even higher than your own.

"Inside of a month's time you will lose a major portion of your regular customers to your competitor and also a share of the trade of all the others. Your customer's dollars are taken from you and given to your competitor by advertising.

"Now, who pays your competitor's advertising bill? You are he! Of course, he runs through the physical operation of writing out the check, but whose money is he using? YOURS! He is using the extra dollars taken from you by advertising to pay for it and still has a big left for extra profit, while you do nothing but wait for customers to come in and wonder why business is on dull. The non-advertiser always pays the bill just the same in the end.

"And one other advertising fact: The proper time to advertise most effectively is when you have business coming in running and you have plenty of money, but when business is dull and you need money, is most small town merchants advertise, just the reverse of this rule.

"THINK IT OVER!"

THE STORY

Martin Iles is engaged by a man, who calls himself Mazaroff, a consulting chemist. After a short time he is at the Mazaroff residence and learns that Mazaroff has a daughter, Sheila.

"How Come You to Take Such an Unusual Name?" Ventured to Ask Him.

—2—

"Sheila, indeed," the maid made a disdainful face. "Queer name, isn't it? I've heard many an hour since I've been in this house, and more, you know, than I want to see or hear of it, however, I'm not the sort of person that makes remarks about anything unless I'm asked to, and I'm glad to say I've been brought up that way."

"Of course," I agreed. "I'll be glad to hear about it, though, when you've time."

Dr. Haskell was closeted in the library with Mazaroff when I arrived. I was shown into the dining room, and there I found Sheila. She was sitting at the table, with her head on her hands, looking out of the window. She turned round as I entered, and I noticed that she had been crying. Then I remembered that she was motherless, and my sympathies went out to her.

"Mazaroff has asked me to call him Martin," I announced. "He's a friend of mine, and I suppose you'll be friendly with him, too, before you've been here long."

"Why should I not be friendly with him?" she asked. "What do you mean?"

"Only that I'm sure you'll like him," I answered. "He's a very nice man, and I'm certain you'll find him a pleasant companion."

"Companion!" she exclaimed. "I'm not in need of a companion. I've plenty of companions. I've been used to them all my life. I've had companions ever since I was born. I don't want any more companions. I'm not in need of them. I've got all the companions I want. I'm not in need of any companions. I'm not in need of any companions. I'm not in need of any companions

Can I Learn to Fly?

by William R. Nelson

Gliding and Landing

"WELL, do take-offs and landings." You know how it's like of sail I want you to do it anyway on hello," said the Instructor. "The landings will be easier than you think."

I had had a year of soaring and how different gliding as airplane seemed at first, and I said things that made the instructor grin. He said he never could say them and screamed to disbelieve them.

Learning to soar is very much like learning to swim or ride. If it is done properly and right you will pick up in a jiffy. You relax at first, I'll tell you what to do as we taxi in. Relax. Don't be so tense. I'll control anything you do. Don't fight me."

My control was straight and still his face was red. Fear seized me. His "relaxes" at times. Lots after we made a few hops. I got the knack of letting which was not stiffed and I could feel the air under the wings and I began to like this glider.

"Keep the nose down a little," he ordered through the control. "If the plane starts to accelerate too much, it is too much for the wings. You must keep your speed under control. Don't let it get away from you. Watch your speed and the ground."

"What's the ground got to do with the speed?" I asked.

He explained the principle. First I, like pilots, assumed and had to be heard both, forming the cross with the nose, aimed, sighted. Then I saw that there was a tiresome coincidence. There was something I could see and know to be the airspeed, where we were, what we were on, and how, and I had to keep the nose of the ship low to the ground to keep up speed.

"Don't hesitate, you don't want to go back to the hill," he said. "Keep on going and let us assume the ground is your friend."

Then I began to feel that I was in an airplane. I was not merely on the ground. Low ones and swifter, then and tried the hills with more speed and I found myself in the air. I was no longer over the field. I was in the air. I was in the air. I was in the air

SENATOR WALSH'S LAST DITCH FIGHT

There is food for deep thought on the part of both wets and drys in the survey of Montana politics recently made by the veteran political observer, William G. Shepherd of Cutler's National Importance, reproduced in the Montana edition of the Literary Digest. It was by the retirement of United States Senator Thomas J. Walsh, who is fighting a strenuous and third fight against a determined and strong opposition.

Senator Walsh is a ardent dry, running on the Democratic ticket. His opponent at home is Judge Albert Galen, Republican, who is fully as wet as Walsh is dry.

Malodministration of enforcement laws in Montana has brought such a violent public reaction that Mr. Shepherd sums up the situation as follows: The issue now has reached a point where, be we wet or dry, it is impossible to vote for a prominent man who is already on record as an official participant in nothing but the ancient right of petition which had its origin in the Magna Charta. It is a right of the sandhill and the swadhill, sorts of boys, reactionaries or radicals. It is not only legally impossible to deny this right, but practically impossible unless Congress is locked up in solitary confinement."

Lippman points out that the passing of actual cash by lobbyists is rare. Coercion by leaders of blocs, labor, farmers, capital, those religious or racial, are the most terrifying, he says. The so-called leaders seldom deliver or withhold enacted support, but the threat, like the sword of Damocles, is always there. Social, as well as business favors are often forms of bribes, more powerful than money, says the writer.

"The actual destruction of lobbying by the defeat of the Caraway bill," continues Lippman, "would present no problem of importance. It would not affect the amount or the type of influence that could be exerted by the organized forces of society. There is no way of abolishing such pressure. It is the very life blood of a democratic government that the people of the State or the Nation of issue. There are lots of citizens who would still like to see the repeal of a specific constitutional law and by prohibition. Prohibitionists too, will continue to agitate against the modification in any form, even if they have to accept it."

THIRTY-SIX THOUSAND LIVES

The United States is on the way toward establishing a new high record for automobile deaths in 1930, according to a safety council authority. It is forecast that at the end of 1930 the total for the year will be 36,000 persons killed. Compared very close with those last year, when the present figure was reached, and with 1928, when 31,000 persons were killed, the rate will have increased a right what patriotic people gladly shed their blood to defend.

9.- Wayne County will not need to wait 10 years to have virtually 100 per cent control of the State under the amendment. With 20 tons and 12 in the Senate the will be able to write her own ticket from now on.

10. The first effort of a Detroit-homed Legislature will be the passage of the Dykstra weight tax grab, a measure that cost almost equal opposition except in Detroit and a few other places in heavy auto Detroit. It had the opposition of property owners and business leaders in Detroit itself.

LOBBY IS NOT CRIMINAL

Following ever in the wake of every session of most every Legislature in Michigan has brought such a violent public reaction that Mr. Shepherd sums up the situation as follows: The issue now has reached a point where, be we wet or dry, it is impossible to vote for a prominent man who is already on record as an official participant in nothing but the ancient right of petition which had its origin in the Magna Charta. It is a right of the sandhill and the swadhill, sorts of boys, reactionaries or radicals. MICHIGAN BELL TELEPHONE CO.

When a man settles down in his easy chair, he wants undisturbed comfort, above all. What will add more to his comfort and ease than an extension telephone beside him, so that he can make and receive calls without getting up? . . . The cost of extension telephones is so little—only a few cents a day each—that a great many people have them installed in several convenient locations about the home, such as bedroom, kitchen, den and basement.

AMENDMENTS TO BE SUBMITTED TO ELECTORS NOV. 4

There will be submitted to the electors, at the General November election to be held on Tuesday, November 4, 1930, the following proposed amendment to the Constitution of this State and referendum on Act 117, P. A. 1929:

The proposed amendment to Article X, Section 14, is as follows:

"Section 14. The state shall not be a party to nor interested in any work of internal improvement or in the carrying on of any such work except in the improvement of, or adding to the improvement of public roads, in the improvement of, or aiding in the improvement of some of drainage only. In the reforestation and protection of lands owned by the state, and in the expenditure of grants to the state of land or other property."

This proposed amendment, if adopted, will provide that the state may be a party to, or cooperate in, improving rivers and streams for the purpose of drainage only.

The proposed amendment to Article XIV, Section 2, is as follows:

"Section 2. Every homestead of not exceeding forty acres of land and the dwelling house thereon and the appurtenances thereof, and such reasonable personal property as the owner thereof and not included in any town plat, city or village; or rural thereof, at the option of the owner, any lot in any city, village or recorded town plat, or such parts of lots as shall be used for the purposes of a dwelling house thereon and its appurtenances, shall be exempt from forced sale on execution, or any other final process from a court to the amount of not less than three thousand dollars, and no judge or court commissioner shall issue any writ or process whereby such property shall be taken from the owner or his family, but the benefit of this exemption shall not be allowed to any person other than a resident of this State, nor to any corporation; and no property shall be exempt from such sale for taxes or assessments, or for the payment of obligations contracted for the purchase of said premises, or for the erection of buildings thereon, or for labor performed or materials furnished in making improvements thereon, unless by consent of the husband or wife, if married, given in writing, nor shall any process issue for the collection thereof. Provided, however, That in case of the selling of any property exempt from forced sale on execution, or any other final process from a court, the excess in value of the property sold over the sum exempted as herein provided shall be paid to the person entitled to such exemption, after the payment of the prior liens and the costs of sale."

"Section 4. At the first regular session of the Legislature, and at special sessions of the Legislature following the conversation of the inhabitants of this state in each United States decennial census, the Legislature shall by law in accordance with the provisions of this constitution rearrange the senatorial districts and apportion anew representation among the several counties and districts, according to the number of inhabitants, acting on the basis of the census and preceding enumeration; provided, however, that if the figures as to the population of this state by counties according to said enumeration are not available before the adjournment of the Legislature shall carry out the provisions of this section at the first regular or special session after the time when such figures are available. If any county, township, city, village or ward shall not comply with the provisions of this section, then the secretary of state shall withhold the apportionment of said senatorial and senatorial districts or representation from the representatives in the Legislature which such county, township, city, village or ward is entitled to, until such time as the provisions of this section are complied with."

Act 119 P. A. 1929, imposing a tax upon cigarettes, and, etc., of cigarettes, is as follows:

An act to impose a specific tax upon the sale, gift, exchange, barter or distribution of cigarettes in this state; to provide for the collection of such tax and for the prescribing of rules and regulations therefor; and to prescribe penalties for violations of this act.

The People of the State of Michigan enact:

Section 1. Every person, firm, association or corporation, selling or engaging in the business of selling cigarettes in this state, shall pay to the state a specific tax on all cigarettes sold, given away, exchanged or bartered, at the rate of one cent on each ten cigarettes or fraction thereof sold. Only one sale of the same article shall be used in computing the amount due.

Section 2. The tax hereby imposed shall be paid and the stamps hereinafter provided for shall be affixed by the person first engaging in possession or ownership of cigarettes to every package of cigarettes sold, given away, exchanged, bartered, or otherwise distributed, sold or given away in this state, unless such stamps have been affixed or attached thereto by the manufacturer or distributor of such cigarettes.

Section 3. The tax hereby imposed shall be paid by the purchase of stamps by the secretary of state, as shall be prescribed by him. Unless otherwise provided by law, every dealer, distributor or manufacturer in this state shall affix to each package of cigarettes the stamp or stamps purchased from the secretary of state, which stamp shall be in the amount of the tax upon the contents of such package. The stamp so affixed shall be evidence of payment of the tax on the cigarettes contained in the package. It is a face evidence of payment of the taxes levied by this act. Any person who shall own any package of cigarettes or remove any of the contents therefrom without the stamp required by this act having been affixed to such package, or any person who shall open any package of cigarettes or remove any of the contents therefrom, unless the stamps shall have been cancelled, mutilated or destroyed, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of not more than ten dollars and costs of prosecution, or by imprisonment in the county jail not more than ten days, or both, in the discretion of the court.

Section 4. It shall be unlawful for any person to sell, offer for sale, barter, exchange or give away any cigarettes in this state without there having been first affixed to each individual package of cigarettes the stamp required to be affixed thereto by this act. Any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of not more than one hundred dollars or imprisonment in the county jail not more than ninety days, or both, in the discretion of the court.

Section 5. Any person who shall falsely or fraudulently make, forge, alter or counterfeit any stamp provided by the Secretary of State or shall cause or procure to be falsely or fraudulently made, forged, altered or counterfeited any such stamp, or who shall knowingly and willfully purchase, receive, have in his possession or offer for sale, altered, forged, or counterfeited stamp, prescribed by the secretary of state under the provisions of this act, or who shall use more than once any such stamp provided by this act for the purpose of affixing the same to a package of cigarettes, or who shall use, sell or offer for sale any such stamp which has been used, shall be guilty of a felony, punishable by a fine not exceeding five thousand dollars or imprisonment in the state prison not more than five years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

Section 6. The provisions of this act are severable and if any part, section or sentence thereof shall be held unconstitutional or invalid, the same shall not affect the validity of any remaining portion of this act.

Section 10. As used in this act: (a) The word "person shall be construed to mean and include person, firms, associations and corporations.

(b) The word "distributor" shall be construed to mean and include every person who engages in the business of receiving or importing cigarettes and vending the original sale or gift thereof in this state.

(c) The word "dealer" shall be construed to mean all classes of sale or distribution of cigarettes in this state, whether wholesale or retail.

(d) The word "cigarette" shall be construed to mean all classes of cigarettes, of tobacco and other compositions rolled in paper or in any substance not containing tobacco.

This notice is given in compliance with Section 1 Chapter 7 of Act No. 51, P. A. 1925, which is as follows:

"The secretary of state shall duly publish a concise abstract of each law, setting forth the nature of any such proposed amendment, or other question, and shall send copies of such statements to the several daily and weekly newspapers published in the state, unless such publication be made. Also, which place they left in Toledo with the intention of coasting it around to Grand Rapids, where they had a friend who would take them home, but getting short of seastores they put into Pine River, in hopes to find a friend there, but finding none were adverse for several days embarking when they entered the river, and we trust it has not been misplaced. The "Sentinel" is of opinion that the Pains had objects in view other than those mentioned, as this dreary must have been the first winter, and how many they have visited before we cannot say. Hot they blamed it through not enjoying that winter without many of the comforts of life and the society of neighbors, but for several succeeding years they kept on sailing and sailing, life began to run low, and the everything grades down now; they are settling down on all sides of the lake, and they, as it were, surrounded by neighbors good and kind.

The River was for several years the largest craft in Pine Lake, and owing to her peculiar build and immense regards delightful comfort, was an object at which was fired many a joke and witticism she was, like many other noted vessels the theme for the poets, some sung of the glories of floating on the water under the shade of her awning, another . However unseaworthy she might have been, she carried with a load of stones and hoops from the River to the Beavers, and, in return, brought such provisions in safety to those who would have been left in hard circumstances had she been cast away.

The arrival of the Rover was an incident in the early settlement of the Pine River country that will be long remembered by some if its half-dozen, especially by the Rotsaert Bros., of the firm of A. Rotsaert & Co. He came a passenger on her from the Saginaw country. Whether the idea of making the trip in the Rover, or a desire to be in company of her fair passengers, was what attracted him we cannot say; but the facts are he came in the Rover, and we have your fancy to conjecture why he came.

"The Sentinel."—This is the name of a handsome sailing yacht launched by Seth F. Mason, Esq., of this village. Mr. Mason, with practical ingenuity, conferred upon the christening of his little vessel, and we trust it has not been misplaced. The "Sentinel" is of about 27 feet keel, six feet nine inches beam, and will accurately draw two feet six inches. She was built under the eye of her builder, for the private use of her builder, and is admirably suited for that purpose. She is schooner rigged, with a large mainsail and jib, and a small jigger. She is very fast, and will be a favorite with her owner and his friends. Her model is very handsome, and she is a credit to the builder, Mr. Mason, who has evinced much skill in the construction of his craft. She is now lying at the foot of Mason street, and will be launched on Saturday next. Success to the "Sentinel."

state assessment 70% of Michigan's largest farm units is assessed less than 35%, yet it pays 80% of the taxes.

The farmer's case best illustrated the evils of the state property tax. Michigan's farming industry is in a deplorable condition because of high taxes and other factors. Farm values have declined 50 per cent since 1920. The farmer is paying taxes on the same assessed valuation as in war days.

Whether or not we have a state tax on property, farm values should be assessed on the basis of present actual cash values. To show you how unjust is the practice let me cite you this. I own property in Detroit. In normal times I can sell it for five times what it is assessed for. Now this is a farm in Michigan that will sell for even its assessed valuation—and the farmer can't or stands for it.

"Take real estate away from the state tax commission and the Board of Equalization, and with the Tax Commission and the Board of Equalization, there is no check whatever on taxes. With the tax gone, what will it matter to Wayne county, for instance, what the basis of assessment is in Ingham, Ogemaw or any other county? All the committees of the Board ever did to the farmer, after his city, county or township officials got through with him, was another crack at him by sending a stranger to arbitrarily raise the assessed value of his farm lands to meet figures and just level. Abolishing both gets away from state interference in local business. And Huston knows as already have the power of the "farming in."

Getting rid of the needless tax commission and equalization board, as proposed, would partly illustrate his assertion that a 25% to 50% reduction in state government costs. It probably, if governmental methods are modernized and its operations are made more economical.

well as those who left the county in fixing the reapportionment of the Legislature, the number of actual qualified electors per representative will be less in Wayne County than in the balance of the State; and the voters of the State, as a whole, will, therefore, have in effect, more than one vote per person.

The great majority of voters in Wayne County are cast by non-property owners. The non-property owners run the county—the men with property pay the bills. If Wayne County controls in nominating the Legislature the State will be run by the same irresponsible crowd that runs Wayne County and the taxpaying lands and outside Wayne County go to the goats.

If Wayne County will have 100 per cent control of the Legislature within 10 years if the amendment passes. If 51 per cent of the population exercises 100 per cent of the control, the other 49 per cent will have forfeited a right what patriotic people gladly shed their blood to defend.

9.- Wayne County will not need to wait 10 years to have virtually 100 per cent control of the State under the amendment. With 20 tons and 12 in the Senate the will be able to write her own ticket from now on.

10. The first effort of a Detroit-homed Legislature will be the passage of the Dykstra weight tax grab, a measure that cost almost equal opposition except in Detroit and a few other places in heavy auto Detroit. It had the opposition of property owners and business leaders in Detroit itself.

Facts and Fancies of the Early Settlement of the Pine River Region No. 6

While the thames were yet ascending in fiery tongues toward the clouds, the kindhearted thought stern Sheriff seemed to resent a little on contemplating this sudden destruction, and kindly volunteered to assist what of the settlers wanty more had been saved from the flames, in a barn that was near, where they would be sheltered from the storm.

For some time before the arrival of the sheriff and his posse, the Mormons were expecting a visit from such individuals, for they had heard of the doings of the mob on the Island, and had good reason to believe that they would share the fate of their brethren. The mob, who crave the Mormons out consisted of fourteen or fifteen men, a part of which came from Manistee, the balance from other places around the Straits and the four of Lake of Michigan, most of these planning to be losers of fishing-tackle boats or other property, all of which boats were charged to the consecrating Mormons; and now, in revenge, they came to destroy them, and with them the dwelling house thereon and its appurtenances, and to be rewarded by any resident of the state, shall be exempt from forced sale on execution, or any other final process from a court to the amount of not less than three thousand dollars, and no judge or court commissioner shall issue any writ or process whereby such property shall be taken from the owner or his family, but the benefit of this exemption shall not be allowed to any person other than a resident of this State, nor to any corporation; and no property shall be exempt from such sale for taxes or assessments, or for the payment of obligations contracted for the purchase of said premises, or for the erection of buildings thereon, or for labor performed or materials furnished in making improvements thereon, unless by consent of the husband or wife, if married, given in writing, nor shall any process issue for the collection thereof. Provided, however, That in case of the selling of any property exempt from forced sale on execution, or any other final process from a court, the excess in value of the property sold over the sum exempted as herein provided shall be paid to the person entitled to such exemption, after the payment of the prior liens and the costs of sale."

"Section 4. At the first regular session of the Legislature, and at special sessions of the Legislature following the conversation of the inhabitants of this state in each United States decennial census, the legislature shall by law in accordance with the provisions of this constitution rearrange the senatorial districts and apportion anew representation among the several counties and districts, according to the number of inhabitants, acting on the basis of the census and preceding enumeration; provided, however, that if the figures as to the population of this state by counties according to said enumeration are not available before the adjournment of the Legislature shall carry out the provisions of this section at the first regular or special session after the time when such figures are available. If any county, township, city, village or ward shall not comply with the provisions of this section, then the secretary of state shall withhold the apportionment of said senatorial and senatorial districts or representation from the representatives in the Legislature which such county, township, city, village or ward is entitled to, until such time as the provisions of this section are complied with."

Also, which place they left in Toledo with the intention of coasting it around to Grand Rapids, where they had a friend who would take them home, but getting short of seastores they put into Pine River, in hopes to find a friend there, but finding none were adverse for several days embarking when they entered the river, and we trust it has not been misplaced. The "Sentinel" is of about 27 feet keel, six feet nine inches beam, and will accurately draw two feet six inches. She was built under the eye of her builder, for the private use of her builder, and is admirably suited for that purpose. She is schooner rigged, with a large mainsail and jib, and a small jigger. She is very fast, and will be a favorite with her owner and his friends. Her model is very handsome, and she is a credit to the builder, Mr. Mason, who has evinced much skill in the construction of his craft. She is now lying at the foot of Mason street, and will be launched on Saturday next. Success to the "Sentinel."

FIFTY YEARS AGO

we would say that in this township there can come one from saying more than two hundred vacant lots. All of Range 6 west is vacant. The route surveyed by the G. R. & I. R. R. Co., passes through this town. More than half of Range 6 is still vacant. Now is the time to make good selections; and we doubt very much whether any portion of the State presents better land for agricultural purposes.

FIFTY YEARS AGO

The new Lottie Mason, which arrived here Sunday, made the run from Milwaukee to this port in twenty-four hours, with only a peak of her foresail set.

The schooner G. R. Johnson lies in the harbor, her canvas, 20th cleared from Chicago, light, for Manistee. When about thirty miles out of Chicago, a squall struck her and carried away her canvas but being able to make port, she ran before the gale and reached here. Her captain has telegraphed to Chicago for a new outfit.

Two resorts will make Charlevoix busy next summer.

John Newman sands as four oxen oxen weighing in the aggregate four pounds and two ounces. They were a fine team.

New Guns.—M. J. Stoikham, Dr. G. W. Crozier and E. Carpenter have just received each an expensive breech-loading fowling gun.

Election returns will be received in Charlevoix by telegraph the night of election, and delivered to the public at the Empress Lilly Hall during the night and the following day.

We are requested by the managers of the new Charlevoix Resort, to state that the enterprise is not inaugurated by the church society or a body, although its leading members have been influential in bringing the matter to a successful issue. Respectable people of any denomination will be admitted to membership. Starting off under the impetus which will be given it by the spring of 1869 there were 4,784 pounds of Maple sugar made in the township. This divided among the souls as the cost tax never here built, the islanders are among the master of with the view of having the few carried out.

The pressure here last Monday night of Phillip T. Colgrove was made the occasion for a K. P. demonstration in his honor. Mr. Colgrove is a past supreme chancellor of the world, and the visit here of so distinguished a Pythian could not be allowed to pass unnoticed. So a banquet was tendered the gentleman by local Pythians at the Pine Lake House after the political event at the opera house. About fifty of the boys were present. W. E. Hampton was toastmaster and the post prandial portion of the feast was confined to an address by Mr. Colgrove, who applied his precious masterly effort in a talk appropriate to the occasion. Several outside the order attended the banquet, including Hon. A. E. Darrah, Hon. A. K. Dougherty and his brother from New Brunswick. The menu fully sustained the excellent reputation of the House for elegant repasts. The Carnation and K. P. quartettes sang several fine selections. It was a most enjoyable social event.

One Little Thing That Mary Had Overlooked

Judge (severely) speaking some unwelcome remarks!

"Oh lit-tel, lit-tel trop, that entry a student prepares to enter some favored walk of life, only to be foiled by circumstances into something else. The football lawyer becomes a professor, the stately student a stock broker, with the long years of special training utterly thrown away. Yes, you are like Mary. A friend of the family asked about her one day: "Is Mary married?" The one who was an proficient in all branches of domestic science!"

"No, and no thanks to her," sighed the old-fashioned mother. "You see, she was so busy fitting herself to be the perfect wife that she utterly neglected getting a man to marry her."—Los Angeles Times.

"The Greatest American of His Day"

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

ONE of Robert M. Chambers' acclaimed romances of Revolutionary New York, the first chapter opens with these words:

"The day the Tyrone died there died the greatest American of his day. Because on that midsummer morning, the Revolutionary war still only a Virginia gentleman, not yet famous, and best known because of courage and sagacity displayed in the bloody business of Braddock.

"Indeed all Americans then living, and who since have become famous, were quite unimportant, excepting Hardy, on the day Sir William Johnson died. Few were known outside a single province, except one coming from that hard kernel of adrenal, but Sir William was a world figure; a great constructive genius, the greatest landowner in North America, a wise magistrate, a victorious soldier, a builder of cities and a self-devotion a statesman of note.

"He was a Baronet of the British Empire; His Majesty's representative to the Indians for all North America. He was the only living white man instinctively respected by the savages of this continent, because he never broke his word to them. He was perhaps the only representative of white authority in the Western Hemisphere already believed by the Redskins to be immortal and who still possessed the power to inspire fear.

"He was kind and great, all round Mr. All American man. For he was a very perfect gentleman, who practiced much and learned and mastered an understanding and reconciling gaze that loved laughter and gentle and kindly humor.

"He was the smallest country squire ever known in Mayfair, with characters and manners as unassuming

Ar Ed'torial

"To the best" Charlevoix High School supporters there may come somewhat as a shock the realization that in the last ten years Charlevoix has won not more than one fifth of its high school football games. We have recollection of the year when every game was a defeat. (In basketball Charlevoix usually gives a good account of herself and that is true in the days when practice and games were held in a barn). In the old days when baseball was played, Charlevoix seldom suffered defeat. Why is this, that C. H. S. can win in baseball and basketball but in football we are so pushed to win? Are Charlevoix boys less rugged, less agile, or of inferior intelligence to the students in the schools about us? Perhaps a careful survey of the situation will answer the question.

During these lean football years there have been in Charlevoix four coaches, all of them of average ability." All about us in other schools, coaches with no better preparation have been turning out successful teams. Probably then it is no fault of the coach. Schools all about us, Harbor, Boyne, Jordan, Petoskey, Gaylord and Manistee have nine and a half or ten months of school. This means that football practice begins in the fall from one to two weeks earlier than in Charlevoix. A weeks drill and organization in football is as invaluable as set to the team. Coach Zeglen of Illinois, in the last issue of the American, showed where one weeks organization and practice made a team of mediocre players much more a match for a team of brilliant individual players without the week's practice. Practice then, is an essential to success in football.

Again the school hours in Charlevoix interfere with the time available for practice. The school day is one of only part of person's life. Some will take a fisherman's day, while others, the sons of artpians will write on the post carrier, the fastest person in the colony at that time. The boys are dismissed at four, and by the time they change clothes, get their clothes and run up to the field, it is 4:30. At 5:30 it is dark and we send the half hour in between is twilight.

Now a fracas is entertaining over whether or not she should have her students make a collection of old colonial things—papers, books, and even clothes, if any are to be found. The pupils are seriously thinking of taking post-haste to the Smithson ian Institute.

Junior Care Play

A Junior Class Meeting was held Monday morning, October 20, for the purpose of selling class members about the Junior play. It is practically decided that it will be given in the Auditorium Nov. 5. The object for the cast will be held as soon as the book comes, probably the first of next week.

The play to be given is "The Green Hedge High," by Lewis Beach. It was given in Miss Bowman's Civic Theater in Detroit two years ago as a part of the Christmas Festival. It has become very popular in high schools, colleges, and community theaters. It is a mixture of clever comedy and near tragedy. This play is one which is sure to attract a large crowd.

Lyceum Course

The Lyceum Course entertainment last Tuesday night proved to be a highly attractive and well enjoyed affair. The Hernandez Brothers, who are Peruvians, played many classical as well as popular numbers. Besides their stringed instruments a musical saw was played, which produced some very pleasing effects.

The machine was considerably worn.

All in all the outcome of the crisis was lucky for each of the occupants of the car, otherwise one or more fatalities could be recorded.

Mr. Alcox is still confined to the home but continued improvement will permit his appearance on the street soon.

History

The American history classes are starting several interesting projects. Miss Tenhouse is having her students improvement my colonial character they will and then write a theme on a day of that person's life. Some will take a fisherman's day, while others, the sons of artpians will write on the post carrier, the fastest person in the colony at that time. The boys are dismissed at four, and by the time they change clothes, get their clothes and run up to the field, it is 4:30. At 5:30 it is dark and we send the half hour in between is twilight.

Home Economics

The Home Economics Department has spent the greater share of the school year so far in canning fruits and vegetables. The "cold pack" method was used in most cases. Along with the canning, the class made both jam and jelly. While doing this the costs of the old boiling method and the new cerin method were compared to see which proved to be the most economical. Exhibitions of the canning were found at the County Fair.

Besides canning the girls have had lessons in deep fat frying and have made the following: French fried potatoes; doughnuts and fritters. Although not many are enrolled the work done by the few has been very creditable and splendid advance is being made.

I asked Augustus to go to the Mancelona game with me but she refused on the grounds that she got sore at the boys every time they get the ball. She says the only thing they do is fall on it—instead of dribbling down the field to a touchdown. On the way home she complained that altho' she'd watched carefully, every time the boys got the ball they started to run. She kept yelling, "Stall, Stall."

Reserves vs. Varsity

Last Friday night the second team gave the first team a run for their money in a practice game. The score was 12 and 6, 6 favor of the varsity. In the first part of the game the "whites" succeeded but the "reds" scarcely going, but after the intermission the reds made by the "whites" the "reds" rallied. The touchdowns were made by Novak and Ferguson. The lineup for both teams:

Charlevoix will tackle Ironton next Saturday on the home field. The locals are going to have a hard time to defeat the visitors, as from the case, but they can do it if they play the kind of football we know they are capable of playing. Gaylord has a victory over East Jordan to its credit, while all Charlevoix fans will agree that a 6 to 0 victory over Boyne City is a big one.

Regarding the games that were played last Saturday, we are happy to state that the college teams of the Middle West which we have already pulled to glory and honor, are of tremendous this year, including the Universets of Michigan, Notre Dame and Illinois, all of which are clearly over other strong teams.

There is an old saying that a prophet is without honor in his own country. That seems to be true of Coach Ray Byrne, who is a native son of Charlevoix, and who is unable to attend the banquet being tendered him tonight by the Kiwanis Club. Coach Byrne is now in the employ of the famous old pirate, He probably does it because we take the Detroit News, and not the Free Press.

Ann Arbor Achievement Test

That points grouped in any one grade may represent a wide range of abilities is shown by the Ann Arbor Achievement Test give last week in grades four to nine. SPORT NOTES HERE AND THERE

By Newman

Charlevoix did not play a football game last Saturday and we are glad of it. The day, as you know, was somewhat chilly, and it would have been very unpleasant for the boys to have played that afternoon. They would have had to run around and fall down in about an inch of snow. The spectators would have got cold feet and gone home, leaving nobody to watch the finish of the game—or the subs, the coaches, and the newspapers reporter. Yes, indeed it is a good thing that Charlevoix did not have a game scheduled for last week.

It is taken for granted that a football game on a cold or windy afternoon will be postponed or cancelled in case of stormy weather, and even a basketball game will be put off if the visitors cannot negotiate the snow drifts on the road, but who ever heard of a baseball game being stopped for any reason whatever? It just isn't done. It is the wonder of all sports. The lineup for the touchdowns were made by: Novak and Ferguson. Hill Novak, Tenhouse, Collner and Davids Dick, Livingston and Gauther also attended the conference on Sunday.

Has New Theory of Longevity

Paris—Search has been renewed for a fountain of youth, the nailed to the strange experiment by which an attempt to prolong rejuvenator hopes to prove that man's normal position, like that of the four-footed beasts, is re-clining.

Rene Hammer of St. Louis, whose interest in psychology and physical culture led experimentally-minded, was recently in the service of a group of unusual advertisements appearing in the newspapers. He thought that if When Hammer joined advertisement appeared in the newspaper he would be poor-earthy and that he would although there was money was ever willing to try.

Hammer said he wanted to convince who would go to the United States for one year to live in India's tropical companions and practical-ally-unclothed. Hammer, he explained, he would be required to sleep in short periods alternately with his wife and to spend three waking hours exercising.

In exploiting his belief that the proposed experiments should not be restricted to Hammer and his wife, he announced that death to the thicker, longer to live longer. Hammer said he thought longevity is possible if a perfect mixture of the body's entire dual mechanism, reproductive and nervous, is attained.

He was a member of the best clubs. He was married to a woman of charm and culture, and was the father of two children. He was a man with a top hat and cane, and he had a position in the world. He was a success.

Cutler was born in poverty. His father died when he was a child, and his mother struggled to support him and his brother. He was a newsboy, a bootblack, a delivery boy, and a clerk in a grocery store. He worked his way through college, and after graduation he started in business for himself. He was successful from the start. He had the ability to get along with people, and he had the ability to make money. He was a good mixer, and he was a good salesman. He was a man who knew how to get things done.

Cutler was a man who had achieved success. He had attained the goal toward which most men are striving. He had arrived. He was a success.

Cutler was a man who had failed. He had failed in the most important relationship in life. He had failed in his home. He had failed in his marriage. He had failed as a father. He had failed as a husband. He had failed as a man.

Cutler was a man who had failed because he had failed to recognize the fact that success in business is not success in life. He had failed because he had failed to realize that the most important thing in life is not success, but character.

all the way and although two or three touchdowns were near misses they failed to gather over the line. The only extra point was blocked, but who cared? Charlevoix kicked off again. Gaylord tried a pass, but it was incomplete. They tried another and again intercepted. Charlevoix then ran the ball on downs, and the agonizing blow, ending the game.

Charlevoix has played seven games this year. The "Big Three" of Otsego, Petoskey and Gaylord, their strong games, but their pick was matched by the other four ones, so now it is "the Big Seven." The basketball warmed together much better than in other games, Clark and Foster playing strongly both on offense and defense, but neither did anything spectacular. Austin, by his good work, has made up for the loss in Berry (must be had fumbled the ball before) that was his fault, shall never be. In his comments good matter under each time that might have been overlooked, should be awarded the title of "some scrapper." He also found some pretty games for the finely outclassed quite a few of Gaylord's and made his share of the tackles.

In conclusion let me would like to state that out of the 7 games that all through the season that they would ever be playing the northern team that continued to put forth their best as in all league Saturday afternoons, and they will probably show up the Harbor Springs team, too.

CHICAGO STOCK SHOW MARKS THANKSGIVING

Chicago's mammoth Thanksgiving season celebration, which for the past 31 years has been otherwise known as the International Live Stock Exposition, will soon be again in progress.

This year from November 29 to December 6, the big amphitheatre, adjoining buildings, and pens out at the Chicago Union Stock Yards will, according to the assured prediction of the management of the exposition, be more than ever crammed with the finest products of the farms of not only this continent but in some instances from the very distant parts of the world.

New South Wales Seeds Grain

Among the early entries sent to the International Grain and Hay Show this year were those of three wheat growers from New South Wales. These will be matched in competition with grains grown in practically every province of Canada and many of the States where farming is of importance. The Grain and Hay Show, though a department of the International Live Stock Exposition, is in its size, scope, and importance a sizeable exposition in itself. Almost since its inception, when it was introduced eleven years ago into the ever-enlarging International, it has been the foremost competitive display of field crops in the world.

According to E. H. Heinz, secretary-manager of the exposition, the indications are that the total of exhibits on making entry of exhibits previous to past day of closing date on making entry of exhibits previous to past day of closing date on making entry of exhibits previous to past day of closing date

Iraq Claims Heat Record

During the last week in August and the first week in September, Iraq claimed to be the hottest place on the globe. The thermometer climbed to nearly 130 degrees and there were many deaths among Britons and Indians. Several Arab soldiers and Bedouins dropped dead. In Baghdad there were 52 cases of heat stroke and two members of the British Royal Air Force stationed there died.

OLDER PEOPLE
Must watch bowels Constantly!

As we grow older the bowels become more sluggish. They don't get rid of all the waste. Some days they do not move at all. So older people need to watch their bowels constantly. Only by doing this can they hope to avoid the many forms of sickness caused by constipation.

When your bowels need help remember a doctor should know what is best for them and so pick a bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin from your druggists. Syrup Pepsin is a gentle preparation for laxative-hungry bowels, and for all ages.

No restriction of habits or diet is necessary while taking Syrup Pepsin. Made from fruit laxatives herbs, pure pepsin and other vegetable ingredients, it is entirely safe. It will not gripe, sicken or weaken you.

Take a mouthful next time your tongue is coated, or you have a bad taste in your mouth. It clears up a bilious, lumbering, dull, weak, grouchy condition every time. Then you see how good it tastes and how nice it acts, you'll know why Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is the world's most popular laxative for every member of the family.

IT WAS just 130 years ago this September 23 that Meriwether Lewis reached the end of a journey which had begun 28 months before with the start up the Missouri river from St. Louis. With Lewis and William Clark, organizer of the "Long Knives" and the first white men to ascend the Missouri river to its source and to descend the Columbia river to the Pacific ocean, there started an expedition of great importance for history. It was also the beginning of great romance in the settlement of the Northwest.

No restriction of habits or diet is necessary while taking Syrup Pepsin. Made from fruit laxatives herbs, pure pepsin and other vegetable ingredients, it is entirely safe. It will not gripe, sicken or weaken you.

The story of the lives and adventures of Lewis and Clark is one of the great romances of American history. It is the story of a man, Thomas Jefferson, who had vision and courage to send two men into the unknown, and of the men themselves, who were willing to risk their lives in the fulfillment of the vision of their leader.

Jefferson's vision was that of a great, rich, vital young empire stretching through a vast wilderness and room at the half way mark—if what has been aptly called a "second great adventure." For it was on November 3, 1803, that Meriwether Lewis and William Clark, organizers of the "Long Knives" and the first white men to ascend the Missouri river to its source and to descend the Columbia river to the Pacific, began the journey which was to end the mists of the unknown, bring romance and adventure to the settlement of the Northwest during the Revolution, to the hostile Indians, and to the fur trade which followed in their wake.

Modern Life Compels Virtue of Punctuality

Modern settings are stamped with the mood without exception today. The man who is always on time for his social engagements is regarded as a man of value by his friends. Indeed, he is supposed to possess other admirable characteristics, for by the punctuality he makes them feel quite at ease. Only active 20, 30 or 40 minutes late. As for the man who is so late for business engagements, he generally does not stay. There are a dozen or more time-clock companies found in New York; all of them seem to be going prosper, and many women are too. Perhaps the modern age is responsible for the fact that punctuality is an important virtue. Left to their own devices, these employees would get to work anywhere from one minute to eight hours late.

Yet when you consider the human race in the aggregate we discover evidence from human beings in the particular it is an exception to the rule. It is more prevalent than an evidence that it is getting better two minutes late than ever, so the old rule should still be followed. Be on time. Even if you are the manager you should be on the street starting promptly to any interesting minute was. Consider the pandemic attempt in the people. Then, of your partner is late to meet, remembering he or she is, of course, their choice, the necessity to see, however, a given hour and in a given neighborhood, and so on. The guest of honor was late. The big dinner theme was not spontaneous about an hour. There is no special reason to get to the on time. If you miss the first part when you go in you can always wait and see if before you go out. Yet the fellow in Paris or Rome theaters always seem to time their entrances when the curtain goes up and the show is under way. They come in during the Wagnerian lull, when the music attains its highest pitch, when Mrs. Fitzsimmons-Vanderbilt-Astor-Smith is about to sing her famous aria, when the ballet is in full swing. They come in when the orchestra is playing the overture, and they are very much annoyed when the people who have been waiting for them to arrive have gone ahead and started the show without them. Of course, there are times when you could not help it, but in the main you are late because you are careless and indifferent. Be on time.

ROUTE OF LEWIS AND CLARK TO OREGON AND RETURN

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

IT WAS just 125 years ago that two young Americans started the task of a 2,000-mile, hard-hitting exploration through a vast wilderness and come to the half-way mark of what has been called a "magnificent adventure." That is the 125th anniversary of the day when Captain Meriwether Lewis and William Clark, members of the "Corps of Discovery" and the first white men to ascend the Missouri river to its source and to descend the dividing line of the Pacific slope, began their return trip from the mouth of the Columbia river to the Mandan villages in North Dakota.

Over to the Pacific coast they raced each of the way in the fall of 1805 and back again in the spring of 1806.

In order to make the selling game more interesting the novice class is divided into two teams and each team is endeavoring to get more than the other. The names of the teams are the Reds and the Blues. Mary Lemon is captain of the Reds and Marjorie Mauley the Blues. At present the teams are a tie.

It is planned that the losing team will give a party for the winners.

Latin I

The Latin I class has just making some plans of Roman houses. These plans were made after the class had completed the study of the interior and exterior of Roman Houses during the Empire age.

Football

The football game with Gaylord and Fairview scheduled was cancelled as a "no game" game until one big enough boarded "Bill" Johnson." Mr. Coleman explained Miss Brown's failure English that one day.

"I left my notebook in the assembly and I can't remember much about it," Miss Brown answered.

"Does that mean you keep your brains in your notebook?" Mr. Coleman demanded, "is there was a fire I suppose you'll come in here with blank and shining faces and tell me you knew nothing because you'd lost your notebooks?"

With this respect to Mr. Coleman we will believe students do need notebooks, at least for those times when hear the obtaining of a large amount of outside material. We do not intend to keep all our brains in notebooks but we do like to keep part of them there.

Especially when exam time arrives, the notebook is in continual use. Without it's valuable help we've an idea the "midnight oil" might be burning even later than usual.

Therefore we zealously champion the notebook and rate for its use in many classes.

Drama Club

The Drama Club has been exceptionally busy of late. At the last meeting the officers were elected.

President—Gwendolen Miller.
Secretary—Pat Moran.
Treasurer—David Coulter.

At that meeting Lilace Johnston gave a report on Miss Bonstelle and the Detroit Civic Theater. Miss Bond gave a few interesting sketches on lecturers by Miss Bonstelle which she had heard. The Club then continued their study of David Belasco's book on the Theatre.

Mrs. Bond regrets that the Junior Play-outs have been held and twenty-eight Juniors have tryed out for the respective parts. The cast will be announced soon. Good luck Juniors!

The school wishes Mrs. Dowd a very successful year and we sincerely hope the Drama Club which she has introduced will become a permanent part of the school programs.

Kindergarten

We have just completed testing in the Kindergarten. The Detroit Kindergarten Test is an individual intelligence examination. It is designed to test the mental ability of the pupil upon entering kindergarten. It is an individual rather than a group test because the group test is less feasible for children as immature. The measurement of intelligence of the young child is very important as predictive of classification in school. This gives the teacher an opportunity to observe the nature of retention in addition to the score itself.

First Grade

First Grade has a circus parade which we feel sure is equal, if not superior to that of Ringling Brothers at their best. The child who made the best animal in art class is chosen to draw it on the long strip of paper which is the founda tion for the parade.

Jokes

Mr. Coleman—Davenport, you tell about Rome.

Davenport—"In course of discussion Mr. Coleman asserted to much. He taught school.

Coleman: (to the class) Only the most keen and brilliant students of the school they were fighting for. They certainly added themselves in "Heading that line!" Most of the time John, that logic is not enough try to be solo times. It seems as though some of you girls should do something about that. Clark said he'd be open for entertainment after the next game.

They're hoping "Carmen", "that old devil" grows a couple of horns before next Friday.

Band

With the addition of this years members each, the high school band has an enrollment of forty members. This means that approximately one fourth of the members of the high school are taking the advantage of learning to play an instrument and to understand the rudiments of music free of cost.

The band is now practicing from a new book. It is more simple than the last book because of the beginners. The band will give a concert at the auditorium soon for the month. Mr. Trevan has received the new uniform jackets. The uniform consists of a "Prelude in the treble," by Gaylord, and for his number in the marching of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed." (1 Cor. 15-52)

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "The sin and error which possess us at the instant of death do not cease at that moment, but endure until the death of those errors. To be wholly spiritual, man must be sinless, and he becomes thus only when he reaches perfection." (p. 290)

The Curtis Publishing Company has given the seniors the privilege of selling their magazines, including the Saturday Evening Post, Ladies' Home Journal and the Country Gentlemen. This is a very good means making money for the class as a fifty per cent commission on each subscription.

In order to make the selling game more interesting the senior class is divided into two teams and each team is endeavoring to get more than the other. The names of the teams are the Reds and the Blues. Mary Lemon is captain of the Reds and Marjorie Mauley the Blues. At present the teams are a tie.

employment as a draughtsman in the engineer's office of the Northern Pacific R. R. Co. His education and ability won for him rapid promotion, and Charlie is now a prominent member of the engineer corps, and on the occasion of his visit here was returning from Bethlehem, Pa., where he was sent to test the steel for a large bridge. Besides this he has eleven patents on a cable-rail head grip, and is the head of the Vogel Construction Co., which is engaged in building cable railroads. Thus, has just completed plans for a tunnel under East River, at New York, and is engaged on various other engineering works. His parents and Miss Aggie are pleasantly and comfortably situated at San Anselmo, Calif. The many friends of this interesting family will be gratified to learn of their prosperity, and of the wonderful success of "Charlie" who was a boy among us.

Nineteen years ago the coming winter, two gentlemen traveling north through Charlevoix, broke their carpet just before reaching town. They stopped at Robert Mitchell's blacksmith shop, near the north end of the old bridge, to have it repaired. Mr. Miller made a bolt, and Charles Vogel (whose career we speak of elsewhere) turned the thread upon it. One of the gentlemen was Alfred Noble, a eminent Civil engineer on his way to Sault Ste. Marie to build the government locks. Fourteen years later, the young man who turned the thread on the bolt found himself in Tacoma, Washington, a civil engineer, under this same Alfred Noble, and the bolt found himself in Tacoma, Washington, a civil engineer, under this same Alfred Noble, and the bolt found himself in Tacoma, Washington, a civil engineer, under this same Alfred Noble, and their acquaintance over their experiences, the meeting at the old blacksmith shop came to the surface.

Norwood Notes

Numerous hunting bees around town lately and the young folks have enjoyed themselves immensely.

Neil Shores and E. R. Harris leave next week for the north on a hunting trip. Too bad that the railroad is not completed so that they can ship their game home before it spoils.

THIRTY YEARS AGO

We inadvertently omitted last week to note the election all our esteemed fellow citizen, Judge A. J. Stroud, to the office of Grand Master of Odd Fellows of the State of Michigan. The honor is a deserved one, and Charlevoix county is honored no less. Judge Stroud will serve his term capably and honorably. We congratulate him on his deserved perferment.

The most serious bridge accident of the season occurred early yesterday morning. The tug Wheeler was coming in with the schooner Wolverine. When the tow was well up the creek with bridge tender John Shaeffer at the crank, the bridge stuck. Before he could open the channel the schooner struck the bridge starting the crank of the bridge whirling. Shaeffer was caught by the thing and thrown violently on his face against the side of the bridge. Besides being painfully bruised about the limbs, his mouth was horribly cut and four teeth loosened. Dr. Swinton acted up the wounds. The schooner's rudeboom was broken.

The branch of a raspberry bush with a large cluster of ripe berries on our desk. Jack Kirkpatrick picked it. Another instance of the superiority of Northern Michigan climate.

BUSY STUDENT

A trade rule in boxing proved to Gordon Cochrane, star catcher of the University of Kansas baseball team, familiar to a high school student in the township. In the afternoon he was his own college man. But after changing into the uniform of either chief of police of the city of Lawrence, Kansas, or Gordon Cochrane, baseball star of the University of Kansas baseball team, he was a student of business science, studying for him was second nature. Perhaps it was because he had learned the value of time in the boxing ring that he was so quick to put the two professions to work for him. At any rate, Cochrane had studious looks of solid right hooks.

Fears for Future of Eskimos

NEW YORK.—Mrs. Minnie Bechtel Warren, writer and lecturer, received word within the week from Dr. Ales Hrdlicka, the Smithsonian anthropologist who was born in Bohemia. Dr. Hrdlicka, who has spent much of his life among the Eskimos, reports that the Eskimos are losing their old vigor and initiative, the good qualities that made them the finest of the Northern race.

Dr. Hrdlicka thinks that the Eskimos are losing their initiative because they have come in contact with the white man. They have learned to use white man's food, to wear white man's clothes and live in white man's houses. Formerly they lived in the open, in the primitive way of their forefathers. They were strong and healthy. They were active, self-supporting. They were not dependent. The white man's food, clothes and houses are not adapted to the Eskimo. Instead of making him more self-supporting, they make him dependent on the white man. He has learned to use the white man's tools, but he has not learned how to make them. He has learned to use the white man's food, but he has not learned how to get it. He has learned to use the white man's clothes, but he has not learned how to make them. He has learned to use the white man's houses, but he has not learned how to build them.

Dr. Hrdlicka thinks that the Eskimos are losing their initiative because they have come in contact with the white man. They have learned to use white man's food, to wear white man's clothes and live in white man's houses. They were strong and healthy. They were active, self-supporting. They were not dependent. The white man's food, clothes and houses are not adapted to the Eskimo. Instead of making him more self-supporting, they make him dependent on the white man. He has learned to use the white man's tools, but he has not learned how to make them. He has learned to use the white man's food, but he has not learned how to get it. He has learned to use the white man's clothes, but he has not learned how to make them. He has learned to use the white man's houses, but he has not learned how to build them.

PROGRESS IN ACCIDENT PREVENTION

Accident prevention — half the why and the more — is becoming better understood. There is surely a major industry in the United States which does not realize that accident prevention is an important factor in industrial efficiency—as such an economy matter as a sales manager. In contrast to this, a few decades ago most employers going into mass production in quantity were doubtful, believing that it was at expense that produced no return.

Last year there was an 11 per cent decrease in deaths among employes of mines; and the majority in the improvement was extended to other industries. Accident prevention and health promotion work has become a daily routine in the average well managed business and is advancing outside as well as within.

Differing from increasing confidence, is the vast increase in deaths due to the automobile. It is to be feared that a new high record of 32,000 will be established this year. However, hope is found in the trend toward codperation of traffic engineers, automobile and the motor car manufacturers and the spread of laws requiring safety devices, and of applicants for drivers' licenses.

Automobile accidents are usually regarded as unavoidable occasional accident prevention record.

BUSINESS AS USUAL

The national pessimists are at great lobby as they were last year. But, today, there is no more reason in stirring financial condition and production indices are at the highest state of efficient development ever it abandoned. With the exception of the difficulties that have arisen as a result of the drastic deflation of commodity prices, the business boom in wonderfully clear. All that is lacking is courageous and confident point effort and confidence in the future of the country. We all know that the present period cannot long endure, yet many good citizens, hesitant and wait for others to show their courage and initiative. If everybody would get into the swim, they would all realize how fine it is.—Los Angeles Times.

CHILDREN TEACH FAMOUS AUTO CHIEF

William S. Knudsen, outstanding example of American business executive and president of the Chevrolet Motor Car Company, relied upon children instead of schools to teach him the English language when he arrived from Denmark. He pictures it as an infection in The American Magazine.

The immigrant who astonished the motor world by producing 1,500,000 cars per year is a giant that positively had a tragedy with the English language. Knudsen says that when he got off the immigrant ship, he realized that he wasn't going to write plays and didn't need Shakespeare's vocabulary, but of 10,000 words. He must learn 4,000 of the first 500 he got in a ship yard Night schools, he cancelled, would teach him the slowly.

Every night, at his boarding house, he sat on the steps and talked with primary children, in a short time he was able to understand and to speak about his work. Naturally he supplemented his small learning with books on all subjects. Today he has achieved a class of an accomplished man.

When his father came from Copenhagen to visit him, he "borrowed" the children of the family, one of whom was only four years old. Knudsen says that today his sisters speech was a revelation and drama; one that in the city of Paris and has had studied the English language for ten years in expensive schools.

PREPARE BRAKES FOR AUTUMN DRIVING

The advent of Autumn, with its frequent pavements, wet leaves and other road hazards, accentuates the importance of brakes and the necessity of applicants for license licensees.

Automobile brakes are usually regarded as adequate if they will stop the wheel brakes, so are all stand and makes manufactured today, the efficiency of proper equalization is not as important because, in an emergency, every one brake out of alignment may cause skidding, particularly if the brakes are applied with icy force.

During the Fall of the year, as the Christmas season approaches, the Gruen Watch Company, of Middletown, Connecticut, who are also the exclusive manufacturers of the Bulova watch, begin to feel the influence of the approaching season in the number of orders received by dealers. In addition to this, the watch trade always experiences a large increase in the number of trade inquiries received by dealers, in addition to the regular orders customarily coming from over the trades.

In the interests of increased traffic safety, automakers who have developed brakes improved for several years should protect their own safety by doing so before the first court case and clear stories of Autumn accidents.

BUY AMERICAN PRODUCTS

H. H. Stevens, minister of trade and commerce in Canada, has launched a nation-wide advertising campaign urging his fellow citizens "to do your part of the finishing to give Canadians work by buying Canadian products."

This appears to be a common sense method of reviving industry in Canada. Saving some points over many long schemes for restoring prosperity in the United States.

During periods of universal employment Americans can well afford to purchase commodities without reference to their origin. During a time like this regard for their own interests ought to induce Americans to prefer commodities of American production to imported articles.

Most imported articles derive their cheapness from the low wages paid workers abroad. Some of the economic trouble we are now in is due to the fact that there has been too great a displacement of domestic by foreign production.

Not if you buy something brought from abroad you are bargaining an opportunity to stimulate production and employment at home by making sure that your money goes into the pockets of Americans rather than foreign producers.

Moreover when you buy something of foreign origin—usually sold here because it can be bought more cheaply than the corresponding commodity produced at home, and not often as a lower domestic price—you are to that extent putting a premium on a cheapness chiefly secured through paying wages below, often far below the American level.

Articles of which none should be, the last be so stacked, so that it is nigh difficult to tell when you are buying a domestic product and thus forcing the wheels moving in the United States, instead of in Belgium, Czecho-Slovakia, Japan or some other cheap labor market.

Buy made-in-America products at this time and thus hasten the return of a period of full employment and of general prosperity.

THANKSGIVING AS NATIONAL HOLIDAY

Thanksgiving season is near at hand and this gives rise to the question as to the origin of this festal day the idea of a thanksgiving dates back to antiquity. It was first observed in America by the Pilgrims, and was established as a national holiday through the efforts of a New England woman writing on the subject in the current issue of the National Republic, Mr. H. O. Bishop says.

"At this particular season of the year it is appropriate to tell about the woman who, after twelve years of patient effort, succeeded in having an annual Thanksgiving celebration in this country observed on the same day by all of the people.

"The name of this woman was Mrs. Sarah Josepha Hale. Few women either before or since, have accomplished more big things for the betterment of men and women. I wonder how many people of the present generation have ever heard of this gifted woman? She was born at Newport, N. H., October 24, 1788, and died in Philadelphia, April 30, 1879. She was not a college woman, but was taught by her mother. In 1813, at the age of twenty-five, she married a lawyer named David Hale, who was brother of Salma Hale, the famous historian and at one time a member of Congress from New Hampshire. Nine years later she was left a widow with five children. She was a genius with old-fashioned American woman, and did not clamor for government of individual aid. She was quite content to go to work. In 1828 she became editor of the Ladies Magazine, which had recently been started in Boston. She successfully edited this publication until 1837, when it was merged with Godey's Ladies Book, published at Philadelphia. She continued with the latter publication until 1877.

"Editing a magazine is usually considered a pretty big job in itself. Mrs. Hale, however, managed to find time for many other things. She organized the Seaman's Aid Society in Boston, which is still active. She was the committee under Holy Creek at a point which is crossed by a railroad bridge and where also a large power is under construction by the city of Boston. The pipe line provides the foundation for the bridge and those driven by the company constructing the water forms for the piers on each side of the creek. It was the task of Mrs. Hale, however, to raise money for the creek, sewer and bridge, going between the piles without striking or weakening them.

MICHIGAN BELL TELEPHONE CO.

"NO SIREE . . . you don't get me out of bed at this hour!"

"Daughter gave me an extension telephone for Christmas. Now I know that no telephone call is going to get me out of a warm bed at night and make me run downstairs to answer it. And, on mornings that I can lie in bed, telephone calls won't bother me in the least."

That is a suggestion for a new kind of Christi as present . . . extension telephones. One in the bedroom, for Dad . . . one in the kitchen, for Mother . . . or one in the living room, for the entire family. Extension telephones provide new comfort and convenience for every member of the household.

It costs surprisingly little for an extension telephone . . . only a few cents a day. To place an order, or for information, call or visit any Telephone Company Business Office. Installation will be made promptly at any time you specify.

Ford Digs Two Mile Tunnel for A Billion Gallons of Water a Day

NEARLY a billion gallons of water a day through a tunnel to the cities of Detroit, Philadelphia, Cincinnati and Washington combined. —all be the capacity of a huge tunnel now nearing completion at the Rouge Plant of the Ford Motor Company, Dearborn, Michigan.

The tunnel will replace the present water intake system which supplies the Ford plants with 500,000 gallons a day. At the same time the company is remodeling its power house to greatly increase the power output. Both improvements, costing several million dollars, are being made to enlarge the production facilities of the Ford plant.

Sixty Feet Under Ground

In constructing the waterway, the largest of its kind ever undertaken by a single business concern, the engineers are burrowing sixty feet under ground for a distance of two and a fifth miles. They have gone under main highways, railroads, street car tracks, bridges, a cemetery and a creek.

One of the most difficult tasks was that of tunneling under Holy Creek at a point which is crossed by a railroad bridge and where also a large power is under construction by the city of Boston. The pipe line provides the foundation for the bridge and those driven by the company constructing the water forms for the piers on each side of the creek. It was the task of the Ford engineers to borrow under the creek, sewer and bridge, going between the piles without striking or weakening them.

Boring of the tunnel is accomplished by means of a steel shield, or hollow cylinder fourteen feet long and twenty-one feet in outside diameter with a solid steel shell on one end and a fourth inches thick, ring-shaped steel bulkhead, which is made fast over the front end. There are four openings through which the mud streams, the bottom of each being a table on the shield is shoved forward by twenty powerful hydraulic jacks.

When the shield has been pushed forward sufficiently concrete blocks two and a half feet wide and five feet long, each weighing 3,420 pounds, are placed to form a ring around the circumference of the tunnel. One of these arcs at a distance so that the lining of concrete, which is eighteen inches thick, is completed by the pressure of the earth. After this small forms are set up and filled with concrete to form a solid inner lining which is also eighteen inches thick.

The gigantic intake system of the Ford plant has a capacity of 10,000,000 gallons a day. The new tunnel will be able to carry 913,000,000 gallons.

"INSIDE INFORMATION

Carrots fried with apples are tasty.

Corn fritters may be made from left-over corn on the cob. To 4 tablespoons fresh corn add 2 tablespoon melted fat, 1 teaspoon baking powder, 1 egg, ½ cup milk, 1 cup flour, salt to taste, mix to a batter and fry in deep fat.

Soft jelly can be used up in many appetizing ways. Spread it on pancakes, put it on cup cakes and on ice shells with a bit of whipped cream on top, fill apples that have been cooked tender in syrup with it, or mix it to a thin sauce with milk and serve over cooked tender in syrup with it, or mix it to a thin sauce with milk desserts as a pudding sauce, custard, Spanish cream, or bread pudding.

Very salty smoked Ayrshire bacon is improved by cooking for 15 or 20 minutes in water which is then discarded and replaced with fresh water. To serve fried bacon, pick the bacon from the boiler after boiling and add to a white sauce. One or two hard-cooked eggs in the sauce are an improvement.

Eggs for lunch or dinner may be shirred, curried, baked with cheese, served with ham, poached or fried, and with or without Hollandaise sauce; scrambled with bacon baked in tomato cups, made into omelets, or baked in a cheese soufflé. Leaflet 29-L, Egg at Any Meal, is a publication which may be obtained from the U. S. Department of Agriculture. It contains many recipes for such dishes as these and other ways of cooking eggs for breakfast, in deserts, and in sauces.

The housewife who buys Government-inspected beef knows she is getting what she expects. Uncle Sam's official stamp shows both the class and grade of the beef, says the U. S. Department of Agriculture, which supervises this grading and stamping service. The classes of beef in order of excellence are steer and heifer beef, cow beef, stag beef, and bull beef; the official grades, in order of excellence, are Prime, Choice, Good, Medium, Common, Cutter, and Low Cutter. Consumers in a community that is not now supplied with Government-stamped beef may learn from dealers how such beef can be obtained says the Department of Agriculture.

"Lost your job as a caddy?" asked one boy.

"Yep! replied the other, "I could do the work all right, but I couldn't learn not to laugh."

NOBODY WANTS THIS MILLION

There is over a million dollars in the banks of New York State which nobody claims. It consists of bank balances carried to the credit of former customers who have become lost, strayed, or died. The New York State banking department says that a good deal of this money has been unclaimed for many years.

The same condition no doubt exists to some extent in most every bank in the country that has been operating over a period of several years.

Facts and Fancies of the Early Settlement of the Pine River Region No. 8

The summers of '57 and '58 saw a good many new comers. For some reason, best known to themselves several of them saw fit to leave the following summer and fall for other localities, where they thought they would do better than by staying in the wilderness around the lake.

Among those who then took leave of their friends and neighbors of the new settlement were A. Curran, J. J. Swan, Truss and the Belows. The majority of those went to Erk Rapids. It was quite late in the fall when Justice Below started, consequently the weather was very cold and stormy. The trail in which he started was a small Mackinaw, and nearly brought his wife and two children and all his possessions to an untimely end. Mr. Below's experience in the lumber business stood him in good stead, however, and he soon had a large log.

It was not the close of day that he said, and is rounding West Point, but just was captured and all the boats' provisions and many the water. Mr. Below succeeded in reaching the shore with the lifeless body of his wife, but the children's clothes were soon no more. After watching for the children until he was satisfied that they could not be found, he started back to the town to inform the inhabitants of his sad misfortune. S. F. Mason and others proposed to repair at once to the scene of the accident, but he informed them that they could do no good by going until day-light for the waves had not yet left her, and they would be her ex-pecting themselves to the cold and observe the occasion on whatever happened to strike them first.

"For twenty years Mrs. Hale wrote editorials in her magazine, and personal letters to governors and presidents, in behalf of a national Thanksgiving Day. Her efforts and patience were rewarded in 1863, when President Abraham Lincoln saw the wisdom of her suggestion and decided to adopt her plan. From that day to this Thanksgiving has been celebrated by the whole nation on the fourth Thursday of November."

KEEP THE GOVERNMENT OUT OF BUSINESS

Rudolph Spreckels, in an address before a trade meeting in Baltimore, made a very curious suggestion. It was that the government take the drastic step of placing its credit upon the same basis of supervision and control which prevailed during the late World War. He is disturbed because the Supreme Court, and the various legislatures have failed to satisfy the needs of business. Moreover, he is troubled because the business cycle seems to be woefully lacking in courageous leadership. To his mind a new relationship between business and the government must come. He feels that the government could prevent ruinous competition by allocating shares of all business to various companies, as was done during the war.

Mr. Spreckels is treading upon very dangerous ground. One of the great troubles in the past has been that we have had much political interference with business. The original anti-trust laws have long since ceased to be effective. We have sane regulation, and the Federal Trade Board is charged with the work of preventing unfair practices. That is right and proper, but it would be a grave mistake to create a lot of new commissions with hordes of federal agents going about snooping into the affairs of business men.

The notion of having the government undertake the regulation of all business would be a folly which we would surely live to regret. To adopt the suggestion of putting the country on a wartime basis would invite only trouble and would surely hobble enterprise and initiative. We only have our ills, but their solution should be approached from another angle—Philadelphia Inquirer.

"We realize that to the typical bad the woman or wife who is unfaithful to the husband is the worst thing in the world, but we are not typical bad.

"The war has altered matters and one to regard in the perspective of history. For good it has shattered a host of romantic ideals and for benefit of humans, whether inside the walls of hothouse matrimony. But for good or bad it has altered our ideas so as to put love considerably behind that given our forefathers and even our mothers. Instincts are still necessary, perhaps more necessary for our continued civilization of their economic importance has changed. Love, active economic force today, is formed in chemistry, which is born by war because of scientific need of future conditions that the past decade has been such a flood of confusion and destruction and decision. That most of the writers are with other activities we mentioned above in writing this letter. Here we are remain themselves loyal food as increased by the consumption of new diet. Here we are, separate from our previous existence with a few notes in the diffused to grow from quite a chaotic condition. We know exactly all that is to be known. The time between the time that food was in our mouth and the time it was digested is only an hour and a half.

GENERAL GALLIENI

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

EIGHTEEN months ago Europe was in the grip of the greatest war in history. Millions of men were locked in a death struggle that had begun in August, 1914, and had settled down to a long, grim contest of attrition. Trench lines had been established from the North sea to the Swiss border. Behind the trenches were the reserves, the supply depots, the munitions factories, the hospitals, the railroads, the roads, the canals, the rivers, the lakes, the mines, the forests, the farms, the villages, the towns, the cities, the capitals, the governments, the armies, the navies, the people—all the resources of the peoples of all nations who were fighting for the existence of their countries.

Every one of these resources was being strained to the utmost. Every one of these peoples was making the supreme sacrifice. Every one of these governments was mobilizing its every resource to the last man, the last dollar, the last ounce of energy.

Then, suddenly, the United States entered the war. Its resources, its people, its energy, its money, its men, its ships, its factories, its farms, its railroads, its mines, its forests, its rivers, its lakes, its canals, its roads, its villages, its towns, its cities, its capital, its government, its army, its navy, its people—all were thrown into the struggle.

Then, suddenly, Russia collapsed. World's Largest Bells in Russia and China

Russia possesses the largest bells in the world.

Some authorities declare that this bell, known as the Great Bell, was cast in the days of Boris Godunoff, about 1600. Others claim it was cast in the days of Ivan the Terrible, 1533-1584. No one can be thought of as responsible for the fact that Russia has had bells big enough to be heard for miles.

China presents that one bell was found in the interior of the Celestial Empire and caused some big talk. It took sixty men to move it, and they moved it only a few feet.

In fact it got so that Secret Service men were detailed to keep an eye on it. Then Emperor Nicholas I had to move it. It took sixty men to move it, and they moved it only a few feet.

One Emancipation Few Are in Hurry to Meet

The emancipation of women, as pointed out by Miss Addams, is by no means complete. Many women are not yet emancipated from the fear of being left behind in the race for success. A business woman's club in the city of New York has been organized to help women overcome this fear. The club has a membership of over 1,000 women, and they meet once a week to discuss their problems and to help each other. They have a library, a reading room, and a lecture hall. They also have a gymnasium and a swimming pool. The club is open to all women who are interested in self-improvement.

Kindergarten

The morning and afternoon groups of the kindergarten each enjoyed a Halloween party Friday. The room was decorated and jack-o-lanterns glared from each table. Those with the refreshments from the fire in the fireplace provided the only light in the room giving a very spooky atmosphere.

Any one seeing the number of jack-o-lanterns at the first grade party Friday afternoon would have had cause to think a pumpkin crop shortage in Charlevoix. Several mothers sent good things to eat and there is no reason to doubt that those were appreciated since every scrap was eaten.

"GOLDEN WEST" DIRECTOR ALWAYS WEARS HAT

John Francis Dillon, who directed "The Girl of the Golden West," which comes to the Palace on Saturday-Sunday, is noted for always directing pictures with his hat on. He is never seen bareheaded, even on the studio stages. The reason is that he's nearly bald.

"Some years ago I caught a bad cold on a draughty stage, and pneumonia was held up some time before I could get back. It was a quick attack, and I nearly broke them. If they had gone broke, I would have gone broke with them as I haven't taken any chances since. And I never wear a cap because everyone says of trying to be a 'typical movie director.' The same hat sine has stood him for years, although he has directed some of the industry's biggest successes.

SPORT NOTES HERE AND THERE

By Newman

Yes, Charlevoix got beat in football, so the writer has nothing to inspire him to write any thing of importance. We see by the big papers that there are only eight football teams that are unbeaten or untied. Wonder if they are counting Harbor Springs. But we guess that they are only counting college teams.

Two former high school players are making good reputations for themselves in the football game. They are Max Novak and Bill Foster who are starring for the Alma University.

Michigan and Northernwestern are tied for first place in the Big Ten standings. Some people believe that Northwestern has a much better team and should win up the field with Michigan if they played, which unfortunately they do not. Both teams will probably go through the conference undefeated, and Northwestern fans are saying that Michigan should give up its share to the title because Northwestern but a mention jack-o-lanterns at the first grade party Friday afternoon would have had cause to think a pumpkin crop shortage in Charlevoix. Several mothers sent good things to eat and there is no reason to doubt that those were appreciated since every scrap was eaten.

LOCALS LOSE TO HARBOR SPRINGS

blocked a Charlevoix man out of the end zone for a safety. Harbor Springs was successful in getting a touchdown five times and made the extra point every time, making the total points number 35. When Charlevoix had the ball there were only three or four men who would block for the backfield and this made the making a Harbor Springs' man out of the way it still left seven opponents to tackle the runner. Figure the chances of getting away for a touchdown yourself, and you will see why Charlevoix failed to score any. A twelve year old boy can carry the ball and make a reasonable number of touchdowns if he has good interference, but even the famous Notre Dame Grange could do nothing at all if he had no one to help him.

Substitutions for Charlevoix were: George Smith for Livingston, Carter for Struthers, who was injured, Swartout for Cartier and Clark for Smith.

Charlevoix plays at Petoskey next Saturday, and inasmuch as Harbor Springs has also beaten Petoskey, it would seem that Charlevoix would have a better chance to win than against Harbor, but we will still have to concede that Petoskey will go in the game favorites by a walk-away, however.

Watch out when waiting for the football season to die a show but sure death and be given a decent burial, we are forced to announce the birth of the basketball season. The Polar Bears are at the present time devoting about two nights a week in a warming up preparation for the strenuous schedule they will face this winter. Soon they will give more time to practice and then they will be ready to show their possibilities of having another championship team.

WILL HOOVER BE RENOMINATED

Whether Mr. Hoover will be renominated for President in 1932 is a question which is being generally discussed in Washington and elsewhere. It has been boldly raised in Collier's by Clinton Gilbert who makes no predictions, but suggests that many Republicans are wondering whether the party would not have a better chance in '32 with another candidate.

DEBATE

Thursday is the big day. For a number of years C. H. S. has been taking a few position in debates, but Oh, Boy! such an affair as Thursday night it used to be that to have a debat with Charlevoix was a great fearful event for another team. Then for last few years we haven't been putting our mind to it, but, and I repeat it, watch us Thursday.

The question is:

Resolved: That the state should take a step toward in the people of Michigan.

Charlevoix takes the affirmative side and our warriors are: Dorothy Sigler, Charles Cellner, Lois Hutcher, And such fight as we have in our team and in our coach, Mrs. Ruth Dodd, that we firmly believe that Charlevoix will win by a vote of 3 to 1. The Judges are from Mancelona and Alba and we don't think they will have much trouble judging it.

Thursday night at 8:00 o'clock in the gym. Watch us beat em!

About the time a man is old enough to know better you can expect the worst.

"Everlasting Punishment" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Christian science Churches on Sunday, November 2.

Among the citations which composed the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible. "For this my son was dead, and is alive again; he was lost, and is found" (Luke 15:24).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "Forbid the wrong doing is but the beginning of reform and the very easiest step. The next and great step required by wisdom is the turning of our activity, namely, reformation" (p.5).

PETOSKEY WINS FOOTBALL GAME

SATURDAY'S STRUGGLE GIVES NORTHMEN 22-0 VICTORY

Charlevoix seems to have the most luckless football team that ever caught for the old Red and White, when they are view with interest into the results of last Saturday's football game with the scrappy "Northmen" of Petoskey. The teams were almost evenly matched as to size, although a slight advantage rested with Charlevoix, but Petoskey's outfit was much speedier, and ran off the field dazzling Charlevoix's scaly defense, the ball and scoring "We won, we won, 22-0."

Perhaps that is a poor way of introducing the subject, but we have run out of adds for this year, and momentarily shifted for adds once from the Charlevoix team to their opponents, who by the way have a larger class school than the locals. Petoskey has been playing football for several years in the Big Six, and was doped to win handily from the Red and White, and the fact that they were held to three touchdowns and a saf ; may be called a moral victory for the youngsters that have labored, if you are looking for a little consolation.

Charlevoix used much the same lineup as in previous games, with McKaig and Walker at ends, Weiss and Dick at tackles, Struthers and Coulter at guards, Bird at center and with Clark, Fuster, Stockman and Ance in the backfield. Arvilla, the regular fullback, was kept out of the game at the start because of an injury, causing Stockman to be shifted to the backfield and Dick to the center. Arvilla was later substituted, however, and in spite of a game, ankle he distinguished himself.

The game itself was by no means an one-sided as the score would indicate, as both teams were forced to scrap all the way. Petoskey had a pretty good system of blocking, and the runners usually got away for about five yards, the longest run being only fifteen yards long. Charlevoix's defense was a little better than usual and the runner seldom got by the line before he was tackled or caught, but Bob Fuster made three runs of thirty yards or so, although only one of them counted as a man was stalled on the other two.

Tuesday hurt the local team's chances of scoring repeatedly, and one fumble led immediately to a Petoskey score, and another one also gave Petoskey a touchdown although others indirectly. Bloom Warner caused matters a little, though, by breaking through the Petoskey line and tackling the man in the third quarter especially and others throwing the man Petoskey runner for a loss, or making him fumble.

Looking back over the entire season's record, we find that the local team has won two games, lost four and tied one. The lone victories came and one defeat were against non-conference teams and therefore do not have no bearing on the standings of the "Little Six" Charlevoix winds up the season in fifth place ahead of East Jordan. Harbor Springs, Boyne City, Mancelona, and Gaylord win the first four rows on the ocean as unbeatable combination.

Earning and Spending

It is truly said that it is not so hard to earn money as to spend it well.

The man or woman who has solved the problem of wise expenditures will surely succeed, for wisdom in spending means a multitude of fortune through saving.

Are you spending wisely and well, or are you spending foolishly? Analyze the situation and see for yourself how you can be classed and, if you haven't yet learned the wisdom of spending well, learn it now. Yours is the profit.

LONG TIME SUMMER VISITED PASSES AT MOUNT PLEASANT OCTOBER 29

Mrs. Kendall Brooks, eighty-seven years of age, passed away, at the home of her son, R. P. Brooks at Mount Pleasant, October 29th, according to information received here a few days ago. She was well known here in the earlier history of Charlevoix. As far back as 1875 and for several seasons thereafter she was a guest at the Belvedere accompanied by her husband Dr. Kendall Brooks, and his father, Mr. H. W. Payne. Several times in recent years she has been the guest of her son, H. K. Brooks at his summer home at Pine Point.

TRANSPORTATION OF SCHOOL PUPILS

MEETING MONDAY FAVORABLE TO PROJECT

There was a very small farm out at the special school meeting called Monday night to consider the question of transportation for pupils living a distance from school.

The Board of Education presented a report of their investigations of the matter, stating that there are a number of pupils living a mile or more from school, about 25 at the north end of the district and 25 equal number at the south end.

The north end has to stop first at the corner of Petoskey and Division and second at Bureaux's corner (on west end of Division street, depending on road conditions). The south has to stop at the Four Corners and then proceed to Stone road, Holy Cemetery, May St. and Ferry Ave.

Transportation to be furnished first months or longer depending on the weather. Rule had been established by the board with sole pupils for $17.50 per week and south side pupils for $15.00 per week. The contract to be let to the lowest responsible bidder.

There were 21 votes in favor of transportation and 20 votes against it.

Charlevoix, in spite of its record should get one or two men on the "All-Northern" team. The players are mostly all brilliant performers as regards their individual and team work, but they can't stop touchdowns. Although such stars as Captain Clark, Dick, Fuster, Hunter, Daniel Coulter, and Dixon will be gone there will still be some mighty good men left for Charlevoix to develop a winning, may we not say an unbeatable combination.

Poultry Raising Prove Profitable

BETTER CLASS INSURES FINANCIAL SUCCESS

Proportionately, the raising of poultry has brought more profit this year than most other farm operations—and due to spite of the low prices generally prevailing, according to reports emanating from the Middle Western states. As a consequence farmers of the central portion of the country are planning to pay more attention to their flocks than ever before.

They are being advised by poultry authorities not to be frightened by the present season of low prices. They are being urged not to do so generally has been done in the past when nearly after a good season and turn loose of everything after a season of low prices, such as the present.

A Government bulletin states that "Poultry raising does not appear to be necessary" and warns that it might be "a mistake to reduce poultry numbers radically now."

Flock owners are being informed that the best way to cut down flocks for the Fall and Winter is to cull out rigidly all "boarders," or non-producers. It is pointed out that there is no such thing as a poor poultry season when birds of real laying ability are retained and fed, housed and cared for in the proper manner.

The authorities declare that one sure way of realizing a profit from farm poultry is to increase the egg production of the entire flock. By obtaining good stock in the Spring to replace the old hens, the production of the entire flock can be raised.

Hatcheries themselves furnish the most logical method of building up the farm flock to a profitable egg producing level, particularly since the leading men of the county are organized under the slogan "Hatchery Flocks for Greater Profits," to insure better flocks and more dependable.

Higher egg production per hen, and, at the proper time, increased size of farm flocks offer solution of the poultry problem, regardless of prices.

Leaders of Home Management Hold a Second Meeting

Modern housewives are not backward in coming forward as a rule is the Bureau of Home Economics, Washington, D. C. More than ever the housewives are spending days, eight hour days a week. The average homemaker spends six, eight hour days with the stove and over for Sunday. Charlevoix County housekeepers will discuss at their next project leaders training meetings in Home Management how they use their time. They are discussing methods of planning time, how to save time, how to divide the work of the home—several types of family budgets boards will be shown.

The Charlevoix County unit held their meeting on Tuesday, November 18th, in the Charlevoix Community Building at 10:00 A. M. The 18th, in the Boyne City library, at 10:00 E. S. T.

This project is under the direction of Miss Oona Stanits, Home Management Specialist from the Home Economics Extension Department of Michigan State College. 175 women are enrolled in this work, organized by R. O. Mollenkopf, County Agricultural Agent.

GETTYSBURG ADDRESS GREATEST ORATION IN ENGLISH LANGUAGE

Sixty-seven years ago there was delivered on the soil of the state of Pennsylvania what has been called "the greatest oration in the English language." It was Lincoln's Gettysburg address. Curiously enough this masterpiece was looked upon as a failure at the time. It remained for future years to prove its greatness.

There are some interesting facts about the Gettsburg address not known to most Americans. If you would know what they are, be sure to read the illustrated feature article, "Three Score and Seven Years Ago," in Elsie Scott Watson by this issue of the Sentinel.

VIOLATION GAME LAWS EXPENSIVE

ANTICIPATE 70,000 HUNTERS NORTH OF STRAITS

Lansing, November 12.—For the first time in the memory of the Law Enforcement Division of the Conservation Department, a man has been arrested for the illegal purchase of venison meat.

John Haggerty, Chippewa county, has paid a fine of $60 for having 300 pounds of venison meat. The meat furnished an immoral feast for the inmates of the Mackinac County Jail.

While Haggerty refused to reveal where the meat came from, officers have no doubt but that the animal is now mouse-eaten killed in Chippewa County. For the past few years the number of moose in that section of the state has been steadily increasing, probably as the result of migration from Canada. Three moose were killed by automobiles in Chippewa County last year and several were seen in the county of late, ignorance this year.

Lansing, November 12.—A partridge hunt cost George Bigeon, Trenary, Mich., an automobile, his gun and 60 days in jail.

Bigeon was hunting without license and at the proper time, November 15th, in the Charlevoix Community Park at 10:00 P. M. The 16th, in the Boyne City library, at 10:00 E. S. T.

"Three Score and Seven Years Ago—"

Address delivered at the cemetery of Gettysburg, on Tuesday afternoon, November 19, 1863.

Four score and seven years ago our fathers brought forth upon this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.

Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation, or any nation so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battle-field of that war. We have come to dedicate a portion of that field, as a final resting place for those who here gave their lives that that nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this.

But, in a larger sense, we can not dedicate—we can not consecrate—we can not hallow—this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it, far above our poor power to add or detract. The world will little note, nor long remember what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us the living, rather, to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us—that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion—that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain—that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom—and that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth.

Abraham Lincoln.

THE WILL OF DAVID WILLS, GETTYSBURG, WHOSE INVITATION TO LINCOLN BROUGHT THE GETTYSBURG ADDRESS

THE HOUSE OF DAVID WILLS, GETTYSBURG, WHOSE INVITATION TO LINCOLN BROUGHT THE GETTYSBURG ADDRESS

GETTYSBURG BATTLE MONUMENT

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

THERE were and never could be a tall, gaunt American scout upon a platform, or anywhere else, who was not a high-browed, slow-spoken, deep-thinking man of destiny. Lincoln was no exception to the rule. On this vast November day in 1863 he was to be the star performer in the most magnificent ceremony ever held on this continent. Of course, he was not to be the only speaker. Edward Everett, the orator of the day, was to be the first to address the vast throng. Everett was the most famous orator of his time. He had been a United States senator, governor of Massachusetts, minister to England, president of Harvard college, and secretary of state. He was the author of many books, and was considered the greatest platform speaker of his day. Lincoln was to follow him. Lincoln was not known as an orator. He had been a country lawyer, a member of the state legislature, a congressman, and a failure as a candidate for senator. He had been defeated by Douglas in the senatorial campaign of 1858, but in the presidential campaign of 1860 he had defeated Douglas, Breckinridge, and Bell, and had become President of the United States. His appearance was nothing to boast of. He was tall, lanky, and awkward. His face was homely and wrinkled. His speaking voice was shrill and high-pitched.

Everett, Lincoln, and others in the party had been invited to attend the ceremonies by David Wills, a prominent citizen of Gettysburg, who had been appointed by the governor of Pennsylvania to purchase grounds for the cemetery. Wills had invited Lincoln to be present at the ceremonies, and Lincoln had written a letter saying that he would be present. Wills had also invited Lincoln to make a few remarks, but Lincoln had not replied to this part of the invitation. Wills had not expected Lincoln to make a speech, but he had hoped that he would say a few words. Lincoln had not written a speech, but he had been thinking about the matter, and he had jotted down a few ideas on a piece of paper. He had not been feeling well for several days, and he had been worried by the fact that he had not been able to write a speech. He had been busy with other matters, and he had not had time to write a speech. He had been busy with other matters, and he had not had time to write a speech. He had been busy with other matters, and he had not had time to write a speech.

Lincoln left Washington on the morning of November 18, and arrived in Gettysburg that evening. He was met at the station by a delegation of citizens, and was escorted to the house of David Wills, where he was to stay. Wills had invited a number of guests to dine with him that evening, and Lincoln was to be one of them. Lincoln had not been feeling well for several days, and he had been worried by the fact that he had not been able to write a speech. He had been busy with other matters, and he had not had time to write a speech. He had been busy with other matters, and he had not had time to write a speech.

That evening, after dinner, Lincoln went to his room and began to write his speech. He had been busy with other matters, and he had not had time to write a speech. He had been busy with other matters, and he had not had time to write a speech. He had been busy with other matters, and he had not had time to write a speech.

The next morning, November 19, was a beautiful day. The sun shone brightly, and the air was crisp and cool. Lincoln was awakened early by the sound of bands playing and cannons firing. He got up, dressed, and had breakfast with his host. He had been busy with other matters, and he had not had time to write a speech. He had been busy with other matters, and he had not had time to write a speech. He had been busy with other matters, and he had not had time to write a speech.

At about ten o'clock the procession started from Wills's house to the cemetery. Lincoln rode in a carriage with Governor Curtin of Pennsylvania and Ward Hill Lamon, Lincoln's friend and bodyguard. The procession was a long one, and it took a long time to get to the cemetery. When it arrived there, Lincoln was escorted to the platform, where he sat down and waited for the ceremonies to begin. He had been busy with other matters, and he had not had time to write a speech. He had been busy with other matters, and he had not had time to write a speech. He had been busy with other matters, and he had not had time to write a speech.

Edward Everett was the first speaker. He had been busy with other matters, and he had not had time to write a speech. He had been busy with other matters, and he had not had time to write a speech. He had been busy with other matters, and he had not had time to write a speech.

Everett's speech lasted two hours. It was a long speech, and it was a good speech. It was a speech that had been carefully prepared, and it was a speech that had been carefully delivered. It was a speech that had been carefully prepared, and it was a speech that had been carefully delivered. It was a speech that had been carefully prepared, and it was a speech that had been carefully delivered.

When Everett had finished, Lincoln rose to speak. He had been busy with other matters, and he had not had time to write a speech. He had been busy with other matters, and he had not had time to write a speech. He had been busy with other matters, and he had not had time to write a speech.

Lincoln's speech lasted two minutes. It was a short speech, but it was a great speech. It was a speech that had been carefully prepared, and it was a speech that had been carefully delivered. It was a speech that had been carefully prepared, and it was a speech that had been carefully delivered. It was a speech that had been carefully prepared, and it was a speech that had been carefully delivered.

When Lincoln had finished, there was a moment of silence. Then there was a burst of applause. The crowd had been deeply moved by the speech. They had been deeply moved by the fact that Lincoln had been able to say so much in so few words. They had been deeply moved by the fact that Lincoln had been able to say so much in so few words. They had been deeply moved by the fact that Lincoln had been able to say so much in so few words.

The next day, November 20, the newspapers published the speech. They had been busy with other matters, and they had not had time to write a speech. They had been busy with other matters, and they had not had time to write a speech. They had been busy with other matters, and they had not had time to write a speech.

The reaction to the speech was immediate. The crowd had been deeply moved by the speech. They had been deeply moved by the fact that Lincoln had been able to say so much in so few words. THE FIVE-DAY WEEK

The five-day week of course makes a great deal of added time for the pant of working men and getting the same pay pastrment would as first thought be unanimous. There has been a gradual shortening of the hours of labor during our recent period of "good times," and the only obstacle of that progress is invention and scientific development. As a factor in the changes in the character in a mix pants before we can reach the limited of progress, when carriage by power, and when all the ills of the second and lesser categories will vanish. Then we shall be so independent indeed as to be under the attack of foreign diseases. So as the world's first Robinson Crusoe has been free of the fear of the future. But the final effect of such a pull-reducing limit and four mute under-lay to be three days' fixing of both employer and employee. Agitation, press and vesper in the hands of a few men, being backed by the few great combinations of capital, may not be quickly to an

BIG NAVAL FIGHT DUE IN CONGRESS

The real big naval fight of the session will be the battle in Congress in an effort to get appropriations sufficient to build the warships as nearly as with treaty limitations will allow. Secretary Wilbur has been patient but signs are on the horizon that shortsighted legislators may, in unmindful of the gasoline tax, have run a good thing to death.

...as has been done in Germany, with communism and fascism as the expression of revolt by the masses.

Moreover the merger policy means the employment of fewer, not more, workers. Whenever a competitive concern is wiped out by a merger it means the destruction of jobs.

Benefits will come by working out through putting on the industry it which they are employed a brew of the 7,000,000 tonnes. To put it in another way, it will be another six years before we can reach the tonnage level of 1930.

The heavy ability tonnage is only one of the second and lesser categories. United States will need them, and will be going on the highways in part to attract American tourists. America's highways need with bills and pontoons over the interior abroad.

When America lights the call of extravagance in trade dangers have in several instances that billboards and haughty shacks and vendors' banter became on the country, action will be taken to drive them from the roads. Then high wages are costly commodities. They are the nation's highest pride and cause for regret. To lower their value and defrace them to billboards has no excuse. England and France, Belgium, Japan are taking action against billboards. When will America do likewise?

By a rip averaging about 125 property holders are persuaded to beautify the lands for billboards. The damages to the country and to the people generally is far more than the individual profits made from highway advertising. As a nuisance, if by no other way, billboards should be prohibited.

MORE ABOUT THE TARIFF

An interesting item having its bearing on the tariff situation appears in the New York Times of October 16th, stating that the American Metal Company has elected a large exchange of its stock for stock of the two British-African copper producing companies. Because of cheaper labor and richer ore the copper ore of the United States cannot compete with the mines of Chile and Peru, much less of Africa, where rents are lower than in any other part of the world. American interests have been acquiring copper mines in foreign cheap labor markets and curtailing production in the United States. The United States is the largest copper commodity country in the world, and also the largest potential producer of copper. In ...able as to reach the treaty tonnage, the absence of a protective tariff, nevertheless, the American copper mining industry is gradually being strangled, these contributing substantially to unemployment.

Still another interesting item in the Times of the same date records that international oil companies now rapidly increasing their imports of gasoline and crude oil to the United States, have refused to curtail their production. The American oil industry is operating under an implied guarantee of protection to prevent a disastrous oversupply of crude oil and gasoline. While home production is limited by this great oil producing and all consuming market in the world, the absence of a tariff on oil and oil products enables the companies producing in foreign countries to increase their imports indemnitely, and destroy the beneficial efforts sought in home production. This of course is productive of unemployment in the United States.

These items in one day's news prove how the success of big interests in preventing the imposition of adequate tariffs on American commodities is contributing directly to unemployment in the United States. Yet there are politicians and journalists who are making the welkin ring with their cheers for foreign tearing down of the barriers between foreign cheap labor production and American employment. The disclosure is somewhat tearfull allotted to foreign cheaper labor, but hardly is less important than those of the many nations are to be read and not taken seriously, to begin a program of reciprocation that will give us every a definite period of years, the 15,000,000 men of smaller employed by the treaty."

GUNS FOR THE GUNMEN

One great failure in the "anti-gun" laws, which are the pet of reformers, is that they are practically non-existent. Says the Minneapolis Star, "It would be unfortunate how a law against the possession of guns would seriously interfere with the gunman's ability to buy, borrow or steal a weapon when he chose."

As far as law is concerned, what reason is there for not prohibiting the manufacture, sale and possession of machine guns and other weapons designed for criminal use? Why not make possession prima facie evidence of criminal intent when possessed by a person who has been convicted of a crime of violence? Why not provide that the burden of proof shall be upon the possessor of such weapons to show that he has a legitimate use for them? Why not provide that the registration of firearms shall be compulsory, and that the failure to register shall be punishable by severe penalties? Why not provide that the registration of firearms shall be compulsory, and that the failure to register shall be punishable by severe penalties? Why not provide that the registration of firearms shall be compulsory, and that the failure to register shall be punishable by severe penalties?

NEW YORK WANTS ITS EGGS WHITE

Shippers Will Find It Profitable to Meet Desires.

New York city is particular about its eggs and local advisers find it profitable to meet the requirements of this markets, says Prof. A. R. Hepler of the New York State College of Agriculture.

A good cool, non white fitting and white eggs preferred, says the New York buyer confidence in the quality of the eggs. If a certain brand has a reputation for uniform grading a buyer may examine a few eggs in one or two cases and buy accordingly. When a person in a transaction or does this find eggs not up the well-to-do things into one with a high color and the other a yellow-orange, he thinks something is wrong with one or the other and sends them back to the kitchen. If they are perfectly good eggs a New York city consumer buyer requests asks Professor Heiser.

A light pale, or even thin appearance before the candle is in demand. The class of trade discriminates further against an orange or red yolk. Yolks appear darker before the candle if the white has contracted to many compounds or has more than one or two spots. No doubt this is the way most of the New York state people judge eggs for their own home use, says Professor Heiser.

Making Poultry Houses Comfortable for Winter

It is impossible to remodel old-type poultry houses so that they will give with fresh air and at the same time control frost and moisture as satisfactorily as a new, well planned one will do. There are, however, some simple things that can be done for the old poultry house that will make it much more comfortable in winter.

There is probably nothing that can be done to make an old house comfortable that is not also done in a new, left unstirred. If the loft is built straight across and is not enough for use who as that it is not necessary to strong, overcome with its struggle and a proper remembrance can be maintained. The thickness of the large of some material may be added from 12 to 18 inches after it has started.

Shorter conditioners are more sensitive for ventilation that usually entrance and is something a shorter ventilating one, often be sometimes for one week of an old system.

Too Early Laying Not a Desirable Quality

The birds that start to lay early are usually small-framed, fine-boned, the best birds in the flock. However, such laying at the expense of body growth and size. Pullets that start to lay the early maturing pullets, some of them, will be starting to lay soon after they must not be forced. If these pullets come into the laying early and well developed they may be profitable layers as long as they will. If on the other hand, they are forced to early and are not well developed they may be unprofitable layers. Pullets should be matured enough to lay when they become broody.

Poultry Facts

Chicken feed in a poultry sum.

Don't over chickens unless pens say.

Chickens would rather roost middle than in a dirty infested house.

The constant cutting of the poultry flock is a most commendable practice.

Poultrymen who have been using lights on their laying flocks should plan to discontinue them about the first of April.

The typical hen usually lays the greatest number of eggs the first, or pullet year, then drops off about 15 to 20 per cent each succeeding year.

When the young chickens are raised on clean range legs to clean houses, and given clean, fresh soil, it is seldom necessary to give any kind of poultry remedy.

Legume hay that is leafy and of good quality makes a very satisfactory substitute for the succulent green feed of summer.

The best evidence a poultryman can use in judging a breeding male before he is tested is his pleasing performance of his mother and sisters.

It is important that the hen be entirely from young, immature plants that are largely soft in texture. It should also be succulent, cured so that it will retain its bright green color.

Vegetable Compound again because of my age. I eat and sleep better and I do all my housework, and my washing. I will do my best to answer letters."—Mrs. H. Dalfonde, 6348 York St., New Orleans, Louisiana.

Alfalfa meal makes a fair substitute for green feed in winter but it would be better to supplement with some form of succulent green feed such as sprouted oats, beets, cabbage, or pumpkins.

The flock owner who each day during cold weather devotes a few minutes to making the layers comfortable will be well repaid. Make sure that the pullets are scratching in the litter, receiving the necessary green feed, and are not forced to drink water from a pail of ice.

Control Rodents in Sod Orchards

Mice Are Especially Harmful to All Kinds of Fruit Trees.

Thousands of fruit trees are girdled every year by mice in New York state. They are especially serious in sod orchards. Through the cooperation of the United States bureau of biological survey, the college of agriculture and the farmers' cooperative organizations it is now possible to obtain ready-mixed poison bait to kill field mice. This mix has been proved to be fully effective and is put up in packages containing enough poison grain with oil to poison nine acres of orchard, says Prof. Joseph Ochsbeil of Cornell university.

The farmers in neighborhood, by agreement, can use the poisoning bait. The poisoning was recommended by a committee of orchardists and men from the bureau and college of agriculture. If farmers who suffered much injury last year will unite in the poisoning they can control the rodents. Where the poisoning is done in a neighborhood it is necessary that all the farmers who have orchards should cooperate. Where only a few orchards are poisoned the mice from the unpoisoned orchards will soon take the place of those killed.

Traps Painted Green Capture Most Beetles

Traps painted green proved most effective in a series of tests conducted by the United States department of agriculture to determine if flattened beetles have color preferences. Twenty traps were used in the tests, which lasted for 10 days. The traps caught 1,000 beetles captured in the green traps. These beetles were of three common species as follows: Brown, 361; yellow, 39; red, 1. Most of the insects trapped, 60 white, 421 indigo, 60; black, 50; orange, 50. Four traps were painted each color, and four were left unpainted. During the test each trap was moved to a new spot every other day, so that no color had an advantage over another in respect to location.

FARM FACTS

Beef cows which calve in the fall should be given some grain during the winter months.

One advantage of western or range ewes is that they are not likely to be infected with stomach worms.

In nine cases out of ten pure bred Chester Whites or Yorkshires when crossed on Durocs will give white pigs.

The soy bean was introduced into the United States as early as 1804, but only in the last ten years have we really begun to appreciate it.

Illness is the farmer that fidelizes at fall planning for he shall have help for urgent spring work.

The purchase of western cows from the range is a very satisfactory way to start a farm herd. These cows should be bred to a good grade of the beef type, such as a Hampshire, Shropshire, or Southdown.

Farmers who want to start a flock of sheep should consider the advisability of purchasing western or range ewes. The drop in market prices of lambs is reflected in the present price of range ewes.

Ewes lambing in January or February require more care than those which lamb in April or May. In cold weather lambs in these should quickly as born, and many are lost through neglect.

Pinkeyed will be prevented in a flock of young animals if they are kept running from manure, turkeys and from all other poultry, and from buildings or soil where other stock has been allowed to run.

Wheat or Barley Is Favored for Stock

Farmers May Save Money by Using These Grains.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Farmers whose corn crops are short may save money in substituting wheat or barley, pound for pound, for corn and by feeding these grains in much the same way and in the same combinations as they usually feed corn, says the United States Department of Agriculture.

In soil farmers in southern states in feed wheat instead of corn the department has issued Miscellaneous Publication No. 107, "Feeding Wheat to Live Stock." This publication discusses relative prices of wheat and other grains, the feeding value of the grains, and a table showing the amount of digestible protein, carbohydrates, fat, ash, energy, water and protein.

Where the prices are low it is stated, the value of wheat for feeding poultry and swine is about $1.05 and for feeding cows and beef cattle $1.12, the department says. The publication points out, however, that wheat prices vary, a pound of content wheat of different sorts, as a result of the two added in any comparison in order to determine the value of a pound of corn.

Copies of Miscellaneous Publication 107 may be obtained from the office of Information, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Find Wilt Resistant Varieties of Alfalfa

Wilt resistant alfalfa varieties have been developed which will enable farmers to have the crop in districts otherwise found not be able to grow it successfully, Dr. Kenneth Kennedy of the University of Illinois.

Experiments in Minnesota and other farming sections, research workers have made satisfactory headway, Dr. Kennedy asserts. One thing is sure, wilt disease is still known.

Until there is sufficient seed for farmers to use it is suggested that alfalfa growers find not be able to grow it successfully to Dr. Kenneth Kennedy of the University of Illinois.

Recalling a Case of Doughboy Nerve

I was attending to a hospital in France and a doctor who had just been relieved from front line duty was crossing a parade and had just both legs and consequently was a after he had attended at the front. The doctor turned to the man looked. "Jeffers, this fellow has some nerve—they say with five feet ends, I expect to take one night on the Meuse-Argonne front and found five wiring to the hotel with one foot and eleven feet and 220 shrieking in the side. I gave him an intravenous and found both legs in good shape and turned by a street fountain that there was nothing wrong with the man. However, I opened up his collapsed lung and sewed up the sucking wound in the chest and sent him to the hospital. When I next saw him he was walking on crutches and I inquired his progress. 'Fine, doc,' he answered, 'I'm getting a pension for the rest of my life.'"

Cottonseed Meal Quite Useful Feed for Stock

Recent work by the United States Department of Agriculture, experimental and investigational, has shown that cottonseed meal may be fed in moderate amounts to stock without injurious effects, the department says. The recommended practice is to feed not more than 2 pounds per head per day to mature cattle, not more than 1 pound per day to calves, and not more than 1/2 pound per day to pigs. Cottonseed meal should not be fed to lambs, and should be fed to horses only in small quantities. Cottonseed meal is a useful feed, rivaling the linseed meal in and substantial for and tissues growth and nutrition. The cottonseed meal is rich in protein, but is deficient in the substances of other feeds. In the case of hogs and of fattening cattle, cottonseed meal has been used as the chief, With a ration recommended by the proper mix of this protein. In feeding five steers the demand for cottonseed meal is about 2 pounds per head per day, and about 1/2 pound per head per day. The proper mix of the concentrated ration is 1 part cottonseed meal to 4 parts corn.

Bargain Alfalfa Seed a Big Waste of Money

There is needed at purchasing alfalfa seed. Bargain seed ought to be regarded with suspicion a year seed there appearing on the market in the United States a seed lower or alfalfa generally called "bargain" alfalfa seed. Because it was bargain seed the air, it was also called "Baltic" alfalfa seed in South Dakota among a total of 82 different samples of the bargain type of seed were tested at the seed-testing laboratory of the agronomy department, state college with the following results:

In every one of the 82 samples, sweet clover was found; in 80 samples there was dodder; in 25 there was Johnson grass, and in 5 there was panicum. In 41 samples there was found the average of 15 kinds of weed seeds, while in 15 samples there were 24 different kinds. In some samples the sweet clover was as high as 5 per cent and the purity averaged only 90 per cent or lower.

Agricultural Squibs

A good supply of farming helps one labor to advantage.

Plantation mixed help in put a stand of alfalfa or other legumes.

Alfalfa must have a sweet soil and what away the first time should be well inoculated.

It is better to buy good seed and to reliable seed merchants than to pay the thrift for the inferior fully of the "bargain" seed housewarers.

The alfalfa plant point have the right kind of bacteria associated with its roots if it is to obtain nitrogen from the air and make a satisfactory growth.

Large amounts of essential plant are lost by pilfers on the ground, and allowing the manure to run away. Daily hauling to suitable quarters is usually best.

Petoskey—Charlevoix Game

Those who witnessed the game at Petoskey last Saturday have a right to be proud of our boys for the way they held the strong Petoskey team. Petoskey has been playing remarkably well this year, having smeared Big Rapids and tied Manistee.

The score at the end of the half was Petoskey 12 and Charlevoix 0. At the end of the game it was 21 for Petoskey and Charlevoix 0. However, even if we were beaten our boys fought hard and held the strong team well. Due to the absence of Arvina, perhaps in the first quarter, Petoskey was able to score easily on the game. In spite of the handicaps that our team has had this year, we are proud of its fine spirit that our boys have shown in playing.

On a hill overlooking the city of Granada stands a monument of Moorish art. For nearly six centuries the ancient fortess has stood there, the impressive witness of the progress of an action from barbarism to civilization. It is called the Alhambra or Red Castle.

From the city it forms a fascinating picture with a background of blue-grey hills and a cloudless sky. Moorish art, of which we have been speaking, is the most beautiful of all which we have been studying. It makes the old Moorish castles of which we have been studying. Within the walls are many palaces, separated from each other by gardens and fountains. The palaces are of white marble, and with pillars of Moorish sight.

To Moors in the eastward alway bent

Praise from their hearts to Allah sent.

Their knees on the ground with reverence bowed

Prayer to Allah our Lord Is heard.

"The Alhambra"

The centuries roll nearly three To guard the question thou hast won, Of centuries back made thy name A thing of wonder, honor, fame, Of common creatures come and Gone, As our opponents.

Charlevoix again will take the affirmative side of the question. The negative debaters will represent Charlevoix are Daisy Butcher, Dorothy Staley, and Charles Collins.

They are working very diligently to improve their case and present it in order to meet the strong team which represents Onaway.

There are about four schools in the Debate League this year. The debaters must win 3 debates and at least 1 decision in the 4th in order to enter the Eliminations.

Charlevoix is trying very hard to either which means work for the debaters and support from the community.

We were very pleased with the support given the debaters by the student body and is suspense and hope for an even larger attendance next debate.

"The Alhambra"

Daylight is burst, on the old fortress tower,
Reviewing the moments at ease on her throne,
Pausing before the inquisitive throng
The tale of the splendors that once made her crowned,
Exposing her crumbling glories and pride,
Making them known at the whole countryside.
The story of day is a rapful one
Filled with interest and sometimes true to adoring,
The moon casts a spell on that castle of old
Making the gardens and fountains be gold,
Making the pillars and marble halls gleam,
With majestic splendor, as if aroused from a dream,
Every sent and weather stain quickly erased
And with radiant glories filling the ground,
So the Alhambra throne stands the warm sun of Spain
Waiting for evening; the moonlight lies reign.

THANKSGIVING SALE CHRISTMAS SEALS

DISTRIBUTED TO RESIDENTS OF COUNTY

Wonderful support of the 1930 sale of tuberculosis Christmas seals is requested by Dr. Alexander E. Ja.ivers, president of the University of Michigan and chairman of the State Christmas Seal Honorary Committee, in a statement officially designating Thanksgiving Day as the opening date for the sale.

The traditional Thanksgiving Day start of the sale, according to the Michigan Tuberculosis Association, will be repeated this year by the sending of 167,000 seals to residents of the county. In 1929 Charlevoix county residents purchased $478.42 worth of the seals. This figure was considerably above the average per person sale of 3.81 cents, compared to 4.81 cents for the state at large.

"Thanksgiving Day," Dr. Rothwell's statement reads, "marks the beginning of the sale of Christmas seals, by which the campaign against tuberculosis is financed. Tuberculosis becomes preventable and controllable when more are favored to do without paupe- fear and are subjected to other privations. Present conditions of unemployment and resultant fear prophesy a pronounced increase in the number of tuberculosis deaths such as occurred in Europe during the years following the close of the World War.

"The Christmas seal sale furnishes the opportunity to thwart against this threat of added tuberculosis, with all that implies in family sickness, premature death, and increased taxes and charity burdens. As' who can do should personally contribute to the campaign by purchasing help save lives now, and equally important, they will allow institution of measures to prevent future deaths during their crisis of present circumstances."

TWO CHARLEVOIX BOYS PLAY IN COLLEGE BAND

In a letter received by Mr. Terry Wee from Wm. O'Neill, the latter states that he and Ren Superneau, both graduates of the Charlevoix High School and Band of 1930, are accepted as full members of the Reserve Officers Training Corps Band at Houghton, Michigan. This is a unit of Michigan College of Mines and Technology.

Both boys played in our School Band until they graduated last spring, O'Neill playing baritone and Superneau cornet.

It is an honor to our school and to this give the boys an opportunity to develop their musical ability together with their many friends and we hoped to encourage more boys to acquire these two boys' good record.

Mrs. Barry E. Waddell left last Thursday morning for Saranac, where she will remain during the winter. She was accompanied by her daughter, Miss Dorothy, who will be a member of the party as far as Grand Rapids.

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker: "Mortals have a very imperfect sense of the spiritual sun and of the infinite range of his thought. To his less lenses eternal life. Never here and never dying, it works impossible for man, under the government of God or eternal Science, to fall from his high estate" (p.258).

Book week which is being observed throughout the land between the 16th and 22nd, in order to bring before the public the educational value of good reading for children, is being observed at Charlevoix Public Library, Thursday, Friday and Saturday of this week.

During the past ten years the productions and sale of children's books in the United States has more than doubled. This is an indication of the increased interest in children's reading. Book Week observed in the 619 years since 1919, has been an important factor in this development.

Books to keep are published in the Michigan Tuberculosis Association, will be signalized by a display of good print and beautiful illustrations in order to interest the child.

The modern child has many interests—radio, aviation, movies, discovery and travel. A book lasts on the ground is one of the best components for the child. There are books for every age. Both parents and teachers are urged to read books on the children's list. These books will be placed in the library Monday.

Following is a partial list ready. Edna Albert.

The recipe for perpetual ignorance is to be satisfied with your opinions and content with your knowledge.

LePetit Journal

"LePetit Journal," a paper for French students, has arrived and has caused much interest among the pupils of the French 11 class, by whom it will be read. This paper contains educational articles from various French newspapers. The subjects are those which would interest any one—current events, literature, art, short stories, plays and jokes. An illustrated supplement is included containing dealing with subjects of universal interest. The first supplement this year deals with the French restaurant. Questions and suggestions for study are included and the French is in such a form that the successful class can read it easily. A great deal of enjoyment and practical knowledge is to be expected from the reading of this paper.

English Department

Below are three poems and a description of the beautiful Moorish castle—Alhambra. These have been written by the students in Mr. Osborn's English III class.

We hope you like them.

"The Alhambra"

Dreams of the ancient exiles of old,
Stories related, tales untold
Of this castle with its brooks of red,
Built by the Moors, now long dead.
Beauty and strength of mind and art,
These long years have not torn apart.
Built as a second to show its might,
Granada's jewel from Moors' city night.
The Moors for the enchanted always kept.

Flew from their hearts, as Allah ever slept.

Their knees on the ground with arms outstretched,
Praise to to Allah, our Lord is one.

Dan Lemon

"The Alhambra"

Its concrete halls sentry done
To guard the guardian thou last sun.
And lingers each night by sand,
A thing of wonder, home, fame.
We common creatures come and Gaze
Admire the beauty of you there.
For you were made for kings alone,
To be their palace, castle, throne.
And now you're just a memorie
Of wonderment that used to be.
They are working very diligently
To improve their case and present condition in order to defeat the strong team which represents Onaway.

There are about 200 schools in the Debate League this year. The debaters must win 2 debates and at least 1 decision of the 4th in order to enter the Eliminations.

Charlevoix is trained very hard to enter which means work for the debaters and support from the community.

We were very pleased with the support given the debaters by the student body and townspeople and hope for an even larger attendance next debate.

Petoskey—Charlevoix Game

Those who witnessed the game at Petoskey last Saturday have a right to be proud of our boys for the way they held the strong Petoskey team. Petoskey has been playing consistently with ten years having beaten Big Rapids and tied Alma, Manistee.

The score at the end of the half was Petoskey-14 and Charlevoix 0. At the end of the game it was 21 for Petoskey and Charlevoix 0. However, even if we were beaten our boys fought hard and held the stronger team well. Due to the absence of Arvills, perhaps in the first quarter, Petoskey was able to score early in the game. In spite of the handicaps that our team has had this year we are proud of the fine spirit that our boys have shown in their playing.

Pep Meeting

One of the peppiest and most interesting pep meetings of the year was held last Friday morning.

Speeches were made by the players, as well as by the faculty members.

There were several new features on the program. Charles Snooks played two college songs on the accordion, which were rousing and filled with the spirit of old State.

Pat Moran and Bob Potter entertained by the High School band rendered by the High School band followed by cheers for the debaters.

Mr. Otterbein as chairman stated the question for debate and announced each speaker in turn.

The negative team was represented by Evelyn Dye students and the affirmative by Charlevoix.
